

T H E
C O M E D I E S
O F
T E R E N C E,

Translated into FAMILIAR BLANK VERSE.

By G E O R G E C O L M A N.

*Primores populi arripuit populumque tributim:
Scilicet uni æquus virtuti atque ejus amicis.
Quin ubi se a vulgo et scenâ in secreta remorant
Virtus Scipiadæ et mitis sapientia Læli,
Nugari cum illo et discincti ludere, donec
Decoqueretur olus, soliti.*

HOR.

L O N D O N:

Printed for T. BECKET and P. A. DE HONDT, in the Strand; W. JOHNSTON, in Ludgate-Street; W. FLEXNEY, Grays-Inn Gate, Holborn; R. DAVIS, in Picadilly; T. DAVIES, in Russel-Street, Covent-Garden. MDCCLXV.

TO THE HONOURABLE

HARRY PULTENEY,

General of His Majesty's Forces,

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS HUMBL Y INSCRIBED,

BY HIS MOST OBLIGED,

AND OBEDIENT HUMBLE SERVANT,

GEORGE COLMAN.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE,
MENEDEMUS,
CHREMES,
CLINIA, CLITIPHO,
SYRUS,
DROMO.

SOSTRATA,
ANTIPHILA,
BACCHIS,
NURSE,
PHRYGIA, and other servants of Bacchis.

SCENE, a Village near ATHENS.

P R E F A C E.

AN attempt to give a new translation of the Comedies of Terence will, I believe, scarce be thought to demand an apology. Bernard and Hoole were obsolete even in the days of Echard; Echard and his co-adjutors, it is universally agreed, presented as imperfect an image of Terence, as Hobbs of Homer, or Ogilby of Virgil; and those, who have since employed themselves on this author, seem to have confined their labours to the humble endeavour of assisting learners of Latin in the construction of the original text. It is not, however, the intention of this Preface to recommend the present translation, such as it is, by depreciating the value of those that have gone before it; and I will fairly confess, that of such of them, as I thought it expedient to consult, I have made all the use that the different genius of our undertakings would admit.

When the Beauties of Sophocles lay buried in Adams's prose, it was no wonder that a Greek Professor, with a laudable jealousy for the reputation of one of the first writers in that language, should step forth, and endeavour to recommend him to the notice of the English Reader by exhibiting him in a poetical dress. Blank Verse is now considered as the life and soul of Tragedy; though perhaps too much attention to the language, in preference to the fable and the manners, has been one of the chief causes of the failure of our modern Tragedies. From almost all other compositions that measure is now excluded; and since the days of Milton, it has been thought to relish so much of the sublime, that it has scarce ever been suffered to tread the stage, as an attendant on the Comick Muse. Wherefore, notwithstanding the praises justly due to the Translator of Sophocles, it may be thought strange to make the same experiment on Terence; to raise the voice of Comedy against her

her will, and to force the author to wear the sock instead of the buskin.

To these, and the like objections, the reader might expect an answer in the following translation; but there I will not promise that he shall find it. A man of very moderate talents may form a plan above his ability to execute; and his failure may serve the cause of letters, though not very honourable to himself. It may not be amiss, therefore, to consider the nature of the undertaking, and to examine the propriety of an attempt to translate the plays of a Roman Comick Poet into English Blank Verse.

It is well known that Comedy, as well as Tragedy, owed its origin to a kind of rude song; * Tragedy to the Dithyrambick, and Comedy to the Phallica: and as each of them began to form themselves into Dramatick Imitations, each studied to adopt a measure suited to their purpose. Tragedy, the more lofty, chose the Tetrameter; and Comedy, who aimed at familiarity, the Iambick. But as the stile of Tragedy improved, Nature herself, says Aristotle, directed the writers to abandon the capering Tetrameter, and to embrace that measure that was most accommodated to the purposes of dialogue ; whence the Iambick became the common measure of Tragedy and Comedy.

* Aristot. περ ποιητ. κερ. ε.

* *Hunc SOCCI cepere pedem, grandæsq; COTHURNI,
Alternis aptum sermonibus, et populares
Vincentem strepitus, & natum rebus agendis.*

—Iambicks---suted to the stage,
In comick humour, or in tragick rage,
With sweet variety were found to please,
And taught the dialogue to flow with ease;
Their numerous cadence was for action fit,
And form'd to quell the clamours of the pit.

FRANCIS.

Some of the Tragedies of Sophocles, and more of Euripides have escaped the wreck of Græcian Literature : but none of the Greek legitimate Comedies, except those of Aristophanes be such, have come entire down to our times. Yet even from those, as well as from the fragments of Menan-

* Hor. de Arte Poeticâ.

der, Philemon, &c. it is evident that measure was supposed to be as necessary to Comedy as Tragedy.

* In this, as well as in all other matters of literature, the usage of Greece was religiously observed at Rome. Plautus, in his richest vein of humour, is numerous and poetical: and the Comedies of Terence, though we cannot agree to read them after Bishop Hare, were evidently not written without regard to Measure. The Comick Poets indeed indulged themselves in many licences; but the particular character of the measure used by those authors, as may be gathered from Horace, was its familiarity, and near approach to common conversation.

† Idcirco quidam, Comoedia necne poema
 Effet, quæſivere, quod acer ſpiritus & vis
 Nec verbis, nec rebus ineſt: nifi quod pede certo
Differt ſermoni, ſermo merus.

* Some paſſages in this preface are taken from a ſmall tract, publiſhed ſome time ago, entitled Critical Reflections on the Old Engliſh Dramatick Writers, which has ſince been prefixed by the Bookſeller to Coxeter's Edition of Maſſinger. In that little tract I fiſt mentioned the idea of this tranſlation; and as the nature of the ſubject then led me to ſay ſomething concerning the uſe of Measure in Comedy, I thought it better to introduce thoſe paſſages into this preface, than to repeat the very ſame thing in other words.

† Hor. Sat. iv. lib. i.

Some

Some doubt, if Comedy be justly thought
 A real poem, since it may be wrought
 In stile and subject, without fire or force;
 And, bate the numbers, is but mere discourse.

FRANCIS.

Among the Antients then it is evident that Measure was always considered as essential to Comedy, nor has it always been thought improper even among the Moderns. Our neighbours, the French, seem to have imagined mere prose, which, with Moliere's Bourgeois Gentilhomme, the meanest of us have talked from our cradle, to be too little elevated for the language of the theatre. Even to this day, they write most of their plays, Comedies as well as Tragedies, in verse; and the excellent Avare of Moliere had nearly failed of the applause it deserved by being written in prose. In our own nation, Shakespeare, Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, Massinger, Shirley, and all our old writers used Blank Verse in their Comedy: of which practice it is too little to say, that it needs no apology. It deserves the highest commendation, since it hath been the means of introducing the most capital capital beauties into their compositions, while the same species of excellence could not possibly enter into the comedies of a later period, when the Muse had constrained herself to walk the stage in humble prose.

I would not however be understood, by what I have here said of Measure in Comedy, to object to the use of prose, or to insinuate that our modern pieces, taken all together, are the worse for being written in that stile. That indeed is a question that I am not called upon to enter into at present; and it is enough for me to have shewn that Poetical Dialogue was in use among our old writers, and was the constant practice of the Antients. Menander and Apollodorus wrote in measure; Terence, who copied from their pieces, wrote in measure; and consequently they, who attempt to render his plays into a modern language, should follow the same method. If Terence, in the opinion of Quintilian, failed of transfusing all the elegancies of Menander into his stile, by neglecting to adhere to Trimeters, how can the translator of Terence hope to catch the smallest part of his beauties by totally abandoning the road of poetry, and deviating entirely into

into prose? If it is too true of translations in general, according to the severe and witty censure of Don Quixote in his visit to the printing-house at Barcelona, that they are like the wrong side of Flemish Tapestry, in which, though we distinguish the figures, they are confused and obscured by ends and threads; they, who render verse by prose, may be said purposely to turn the pieces of their original the seamy side without; and to avoid copying the plain face of nature, in order to make their drawings by the Camera Obscura, which makes the figures appear topsy-turvy.

But this matter is not merely speculative. The theory has long ago been confirmed by practice, and the first translators of the antient comick writers naturally gave poetical versions of their plays. We are told by Mons. de Voltaire in the Supplement to his General History, * that early in the 16th century the best pieces of Plautus were translated into Italian at Venice; “and they translated them,” continues he, “into Verse, as they ought to be translated, since it was in Verse that they were written by Plautus.” In the same century, in the reign of Charles IX, Baif, an old French Poet, translated the Eunuch of Terence into French Verse, and Madam Dacier herself acknowledges it to have been an excellent translation. Menage also mentions another old translation of all the works of Terence, partly verse, partly prose; and I believe there is more than one translation of all his plays into Italian verse. Great part of The Andrian, and The Brothers have been translated pretty closely into French verse by Baron, as well as of the Eunuch by Fontaine: and it is no wonder that Madam Dacier, who translated Homer into prose, should do the same thing by Terence. The French Heroick, if we may scan it by our English ears,

* P. 183.

Legitimumque sonum digito callemus et aure, is, like the Greek Tetrameter, a kind of dancing measure, ill suited to the purposes of dialogue, noble or familiar; and so very inconvenient in poems of length, that the want of a proper measure in that language has occasioned that strange solecism in letters, an Epick Poem in Prose: and yet, notwithstanding these difficulties, whoever will compare Baron, Fontaine, and some few passages of Terence translated by Moliere, with any prose translation, will be immediately convinced of their great superiority. The English Blank Verse is happily conceived in the true spirit of that elegant and magnificent simplicity, which characterises the Græcian Iambick: and it is remarked by the Rev. Mr. T. Warton, the learned and ingenious Poetry-Professor of the University of Oxford, that “an Alexandrine, entirely consisting of Iambick feet, answers precisely to a pure Tetrametrical Iambick verse of the Antients.”* The mere modern critick, whose idea of Blank Verse is perhaps attached to that empty swell of phraseology, so frequent in our late tragedies, may consider these notions as void of foundation; and will not readily allow that the same measure can be as well adapted to the expression of comick humour, as to the pathos of Tragedy: but it is observed by Gravina, that as an Hexameter sounds very differently in Homer and in Theocritus, so doth an Iambick in Tragedy and Comedy.† Nobody will pretend that there is the least similarity between the stile of Horace and Virgil; and yet they both use the same measure. But not to dwell on argument, and rather to produce irrefragable proofs of the fact, let me recur to the works of our old writers. Shakespeare, Jonson, Fletcher, &c. shall be my vouchers. Let the critick carefully read over the works of those authors. There he will seldom or ever find that tumour of Blank Verse, to which he has been so much accustomed on the modern stage. He will be surpris'd with a familiar dignity, which, though it rises somewhat above ordinary conversation, is rather an improvement than perversion of it. He will soon be convinced, that Blank Verse is by no means appropriated solely to the Buskin, but that the hand of a master may mould it to whatever purposes he pleases; and that in Comedy, it will not only admit humour, but even heighten and embellish it. "The Britons," says Mr. Seward in his preface to the last edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, * "not only retained metre in their Comedies, but "also all the acer spiritus, all the strength and

* Observations on the Fairy Queen, second Edit. p. 155.

† Della Tragedia, Napoli, 1731. p. 61.

* Pag. 38.

“ nerves of poetry, which was in a good measure
 “ owing to the happiness of our Blank Verse, which,
 “ at the same time that it is capable of the highest “ sublimity, the most extensive and noblest har“ mony of the Tragick and Epick ; yet, when used “ familiarly, is so near the sermo pedestris, so “ easy and natural, as to be well adapted even to “ the drollest comick dialogue. — * Every one “ must know that the genteel parts of Comedy,
 “ descriptions of polite life, moral sentences, pater“ nal fondness, filial duty, generous friendship,
 “ and particularly the delicacy and tenderness of “ lovers’ sentiments are equally proper to poetry
 “ in Comedy as in Tragedy. — † Such poetick “ excellence, therefore, will the reader find in “ the genteel part of our Authors’ Comedies ;
 “ and there is a poetick stile often equally proper
 “ and excellent even in the lowest drollery of “ Comedy.”

Instances of the truth and justice of these observations might be produced without number from the authors above mentioned ; and perhaps the unnatural stiffness of the modern tragick stile is in

* Pag. 39.

† Pag. 43.

great measure owing to the almost total exclusion of Blank Verse from modern compositions, Tragedy excepted. The common use of an elevated diction in Comedy, where the writer was often, of necessity, put upon expressing the most ordinary matters, and where the subject demanded him to paint the most familiar and ridiculous emotions of the mind, was perhaps one of the chief causes of that easy vigour so conspicuous in the style of our old tragedies: Habituated to Poetical Dialogue in those compositions, wherein they were obliged to adhere more strictly to the simplicity of the language of nature, the poets learned, in those of a more exalted species, not to depart from it too wantonly, nor entirely to abandon that magnificent plainness, which is the genuine dress of true passion and poetry. The Greek Tragedy, as has been before observed, quitted the Tetrameter for the natural Iambick. Just the contrary happened on our own stage, when Dryden and the cotemporary poets, authors of those strange productions called Heroick Tragedies, introduced rhyme in the place of Blank Verse, asserting that the latter was nothing more than measured prose; which, by the bye, exactly agrees agrees with Horace's character of the irregular iambicks of the Roman Comedy,

— nisi quod pede certo
Differt sermoni, sermo merus.

These, and the like considerations, had long appeared to me as the invincible reasons, why all attempts to render the comedies of the Antients into downright prose must prove, as they ever have proved, unsuccessful; and imagining that we had in our own language the models of a proper diction, I was led to attempt a version of one of Terence's plays in familiar Blank Verse, something after the manner of our Old Writers, but by no means professing or intending a direct imitation of them. This first essay, conscious of its crudeness and inaccuracy, but dubious whether it was worth while to endeavour to give it a higher polish, I communicated to a few friends; whose partiality to that effort encouraged me to proceed, and I found myself seriously engaged, almost before I was aware, in a translation of all our Author's pieces. How I have acquitted myself of this very hard task must now be submitted to the Publick: but if I have

have failed in the undertaking, I will venture to say, that my ill success is entirely owing to the lameness of the execution of a plan, which may be pursued more happily by some better writer.

Thus much, however, it was thought necessary to premise, not only by way of reflection on our English Blank Verse, but that the reader might not expect an attempt at a different kind of poetry, than I have endeavoured to set before him in the following translation. There are indeed scenes of Terence that require all the graces of poetry to give a tolerable version of them; but it has been* observed to be his peculiar excellence that his plays have so admirably preserved the due character of Comedy, that they never rise to the sublime of Tragedy, nor sink into the meanness of Farce; and Madam Dacier has remarked with what address he has accommodated the sentiments of Euripides to the use of Comedy. The scenes here alluded are to much of the same colour with many in our old writers: wherefore I am the more surprized that Mr. Seward,

* Illud quoque inter Terentianas virtutes mirabile, quod ejus fabulæ eo sunt temperamento, ut neque extumescant ad tragicam celitudinem, neque abjiciantur ad mimicam vilitatem.

EVANTHIUS de Tragœdiâ & Comœdiâ.

in his Preface above-cited, while he gives so just an account of the diction used in the old comedies of our own theatre, should yet speak so unadvisedly of the stile of the Greek and Roman Drama, as to say, that * “ even the sublimest sentiments of Terence, when his Comedy raises its voice to the greatest dignity, are still not cloathed in poetick diction.”---“ And again, that the Greeks appropriated the spirit and nerves of poetry to Tragedy only, and though they did not wholly deprive Comedy of metre, they left it not the shadow of poetick diction.” That learned and elegant Critick, Mr. Joseph Warton, who was the first that gave in English any of the fragments of Menander, when he apologizes for the translation, † “ remembering always how much his elegance is injured by a plain prosaïc translation,” was, it is evident of a very different opinion: and Gravina ‡ mentions it as a wonderful quality of the measure in the antient Tragedy and Comedy, that while it possesses all the dignity of Verse, it has all the ease and familiarity of Prose.

* Pag. 37, and 38.

† Adventurer, No. 105.

‡ Della Tragedia, p. 59.

But not only the opinion of many ingenious men among the moderns, as well as the living testimony of the plays themselves, but also the express authority of the antient criticks absolutely contradicts the assertion of Mr. Seward. We are told by Quintilian, that Menander, * though he cultivated a different province of the drama, was a great admirer and imitator of Euripides, which accounts for the sentiments of that Tragick Poet still to be met with in the comedies of Terence. The same critick also speaks of the force and grandeur, as well as elegance, † of the stile in the Old Comedy; and Horace even in the passage, where he doubts whether a Comedy is to be esteemed a Poem, on account of the familiarity of the stile, immediately subjoins, At pater-ardens sævit, &c. And in another place he has directly delivered his opinion, how far the Tragick and

* Inst. Orator. Lib. x. cap. i.

† Antiqua Comœdia cum sinceram illam sermonis Attici gratiam prope sola retinet, tum facundissimæ libertatis, etsi est in infectandis vitiis præcipua, plurimum tamen virium etiam in cæteris partibus habet. Nam & grandis, & elegans, & venusta, & nescio an ulla, post Homerum tamen, quem, ut Achillem, semper excipi par est, aut similior sit oratoribus, aut ad oratores faciendos aptior.

Quintilian. Inst. Orator.

Lib. x. cap. i.

Sua cuique proposita lex, suus cuique decor est. Nec comœdia in cothurnos assurgit, nec contra tragœdia focco ingreditur. Habet tamen omnis eloquentia aliquid commune.

Ibid. cap. 2.

Comick Muse may reciprocally assume each other's tone.

Verfibus exponi tragicis res comica non vult;
 Indignatur item privatis ac prope focco
 Dignis carminibus narrari coena Thyestæ.
 Singula quæq; locum teneant fortita decenter.
 Interdum tamen et vocem Comoedia tollit,
 Iratusq; Chremes tumido delitigat ore;
 Et tragicus plerumq; dolet sermone pedestri.*

To these lines I shall subjoin Oldham's unpolished imitation, because it brings them home to our own stage; and I would recommend it to the reader, who is curious to see any thing further on this subject, to peruse Dacier's notes on this passage in the original.

Volpone and Morose will not admit
 Of Catiline's high strains, nor is it fit
 To make Sejanus on the stage appear
 In the low dress which Comick persons wear.

* Hor. Art. Poet.

Whate'er the subject be on which you write,
 Give each thing its due place and time aright.
 Yet Comedy sometimes may raise her stile,
 And angry Chremes is allow'd to swell;
 And Tragedy alike has sometimes leave
 To throw off majesty when 'tis to grieve.

OLDHAM.

I shall conclude what I have to say, on the propriety of translating the Roman Comick Poets into English Blank Verse, by observing to what advantage many of the sentiments of Terence and Plautus have already appeared in that dress in the plays of our old writers. Jonson, according to the just and elegant observation of Dryden, may often be tracked in their snow; and in the notes to this translation the reader will meet with many passages similar to those in our Author from Shakespeare. A most learned and acute critick has observed, * that “ we seldom are able to “ fasten an imitation, with certainty, on such a “ writer as Shakespeare;” because “ he takes no“ thing but the sentiment; the expression comes

* HURD on the Marks of Imitation, p. 19.

“ of itself, and is purely English.” * I have therefore given the passages in question merely as resemblances, leaving the reader to make his own comment on them; and shall here add one more, which was omitted in its proper place. In this passage, as in most others, Shakespeare has the advantage.

Facile omnes, cum valemus, recta confilia ægrotis
Tu si hic sis, aliter censeas. [damus.

How readily do men at ease prescribe
To those who're sick at heart! Distrest like me,
You wou'd not talk thus.

ANDRIAN, Act. 2. Scene 1.

————— Men

Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion.

And again in the same speech,

No, no; 'tis all men's office to speak patience
To those, that wring under the load of sorrow;

* HURD on the Marks of Imitation, p. 75.

But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself.

Much Ado about Nothing.

Besides the resemblance of particular passages, scattered up and down in different plays, it is well known that the whole Comedy of Errors is in great measure founded on the Menæchmi of Plautus; but I do not recollect ever to have seen it observed that the disguise of the Pedant in the Taming of the Shrew, his assuming the name and character of Vincentio, together with his encountering the real Vincentio, seem to be evidently taken from the disguise of the Sycophanta in the Trinummus of the same author: and there is a quotation from the Eunuch of Terence also, so familiarly introduced into the dialogue of the Taming of the Shrew, that I think it puts the question of Shakespeare's having read the Roman Comick Poets in the original language out of all doubt.

Tranio.

Tranio. Master, it is no time to chide you now ;
Affection is not rated from the heart.

If love hath touch'd you, nought remains but so,

* Redime te captum quàm queas minimo.

Taming of the Shrew, Act. I.

I do not think it incumbent on me in this place, according to the custom of most editors and translators, to write a panegyrick on my Author ; much less shall I attempt to draw a comparison in his favour between Him and Plautus ; though I cannot help observing that the common-place of modern criticism on these writers is, in general, very different from that of the Antients. We now extol Plautus for his humour, and Terence for his stile ; and on this foundation is raised the comparison between them, so injurious to our author, in the 6th book of the Poeticks of Scaliger. Varro, on the contrary, gives the preference to the stile of Plautus, which he considers as the language of the Muses themselves ; and assigns the just deli-

* It is remarkable that this seems to be a quotation from memory, or that the phrase is purposely altered by Shakespeare, in order to bring the sense within the compass of one line ; for the passage here does not run exactly in the words of Terence, which are these. Quid agas? nisi ut te redimas captum, quam queas minimo.

Eunuch. Act. I. Scene I.

neation of characters as the peculiar excellence of Terence; who, in the time of Augustus, was equally admired for the artful contexture and judicious conduct of his plots. Cæsar, and Tully, and Quintilian have indeed spoken with justice of the elegance and purity of his stile; but the excellencies of the fable and the manners are prior to those of the diction; and as they are the chief beauties of Comedy, so are they the distinguishing characteristics of Terence.

In my opinion, the justest objection ever made to his plays is the * similarity of the plots, which necessarily produces a similarity of characters; nor can it be sufficiently lamented that a writer, who was so accurate a painter of the manners, and so judicious a conductor of the fable, as well as so exquisite in his language, should not have given full scope to his genius, and taken in a greater variety of personages, and been more studious to diversify the incidents of his several comedies.

* Hac fane parte [scilicet vi comicâ] videtur superior Plautus; uti et varietate tum argumentorum, tum dictionis. Nam Plautus semper studet esse novus, sui que dissimilis; seu rem spectes, seu verba. In Terentio vero magnopere conveniunt argumenta fabularum: & quando de eadem re, aut simili, est sermo, plurimum nec absimilis est dictio.

Vossius, Inft. Poet. Lib. ii. cap. 25. sect. 5.

For more particular observations on our Poet, the reader is referred to the Notes on the several plays. As for the Notes themselves, many of them, being taken from the best criticks and commentators, antient and modern, living and dead, foreign and domestick, will, I know, be allowed to have merit; many others, being entirely my own, are as liable to censure as the translation itself; especially those, wherein I have ventured to oppose the judgements of others; though I can safely say that I have never attempted to litigate any opinion, merely from a petulant spirit of contradiction, or an ambition of novelty. It is the duty of an editor and translator to illustrate and explain the author, to the best of his abilities; and if he differs from former criticks, he should give his reasons for his dissent, and leave it to the Publick to decide. He too, it is true, may be deceived in his turn; for as the critick is as often wrong as the author on whom he comments, or if we may take a poet's word on this occasion,

Ten censure wrong for one who writes amiss, *

* Pope's Essay on Crit.

so is the Hypercritick as fallible as the Critick. But each man's understanding, such as it is, must be his guide; and he, who has not courage to make a full use of it, but obtrudes the opinions of others, unsifted and unexamined, on his readers, betrays more want of respect for their understanding, than diffidence of his own.

It was my first intention to have accompanied this translation with a Dissertation on Comedy, hoping it might have appeared an agreeable addition to the work; but on weighing this matter seriously, and turning it over and over in my thoughts, I found the subject grow upon me so considerably, as it opened itself to my mind, that the pursuit of it would have unavoidably betrayed me into a second volume; so that what I meant for the advantage of the Reader, like the Bonus in a Government-Subscription, would in fact have proved a heavy tax. The work has already exceeded the limits which I proposed to myself at first setting out. I did not, therefore, think it justice to the purchasers to swell the price still more; and to have given the dissertation, maimed or incomplete, would have been injustice to them as well as to myself. Whenever it sees the light, it shall be as perfect as I am able to make it. In the mean time, every thing relative to the comedies of Terence, critical as well as explanatory, will, I hope, be found in the Notes. I have with much industry endeavoured to collect, from all quarters, sometimes perhaps too minutely, whatever could contribute to throw any light on our Author; and there is prefixed a translation of the account of his life from Suetonius: with which, as well as the notes annexed to it from Madam Dacier, together with a translation of all that earned lady's remarks on the four last plays, I was favoured by Dr. Ralph Schomberg of Bath: nor can I otherwise account for his great kindness in voluntarily offering to take so toilsome and disagreeable part of my task off my hands, but that he was resolved that there should be none of his family, to whom I should not owe some obligation.

The order in which the Six Comedies are placed in this translation, although the same that is observed in most editions and manuscripts, is not according to the real series in which they were written and exhibited by Terence: they succeeded each other in the original course of representation at Rome as follows.

1. The Andrian,
2. The Step-Mother,
3. The Self-Tormentor,
4. The Eunuch,
5. Phormio,
6. The Brothers.

Madam Dacier endeavouring to assign the motives that induced the most antient editors and transcribers to that arrangement of the plays in which we now see them, in preference to the true chronological order, imagines it beyond a doubt, that they were influenced by the judgement of Volcatius Sedigitus; who, she supposes, had ranked every dramattick piece, as well as every author, according to his opinion of their merit; and who placed the Step-Mother the last of our Author's Six Plays.

Sumetur Hecyra sexta ex his fabula.

The Step-Mother.

The last and least in merit of the Six.

Agreeably to this notion, she places the Step-Mother the last in her collection, which has induced her followers to do the same thing : but the truth is, that in most copies, the Step-Mother stands the fifth, so that, in all probability, as little respect was paid to the judgement of Volcarius concerning the respective merit of our author's several pieces, if indeed he decided on them all, as to his injudicious decision of the rank due to him among the Comick Poets.

The old compilers had, I doubt not, a reason for the order in which they placed these comedies : it is impossible to speak with any confidence on so dark a point at this distance of time ; but after a longer investigation of this matter than perhaps such a trifle required, it appeared to me the most plausible, as well as most simple manner of accounting for it, to suppose that, in regard to the original authors from which the comedies were taken, the principal intention of the first compilers was merely to keep together all the pieces imitated from the same Greek poet. Accordingly, the four first plays, The Andrian, Eunuch, Self-Tormentor, and Brothers, are from Menander ;
and

and the two last, the Step-Mother and Phormio, from Apollodorus: allowing for this variation, they are ranged, as nearly as may be, according to the true order in which they appeared; for I take it for granted, that the Eunuch is placed the second, that the Self-Tormentor might not be forced out of its right place; since in the present arrangement the Self-Tormentor and the Andrian still precisely occupy their original rank. This however is submitted merely as conjecture; but it is remarkable, that however books differ in other respects, they all concur in giving the first place to the Andrian; though it would be difficult for the nicest critick to assign the reasons why it ought, in point of merit, to take the lead of the Eunuch, or why either of the two should precede the Self-Tormentor. It should seem therefore, that the chronological order was attended to by the old transcribers, as far as it could be reconciled to the plan on which they proceeded.

Before I conclude this Preface, it is necessary to speak of two or three circumstances peculiar to these Comedies. First then, the English Reader is desired to observe, that the manners, prevailing in

in them all, are wholly Græcian. The scene is always laid in or near Athens, the actors were dressed in Græcian habits, suitable to their respective characters; and the customs, coins, &c. occasionally mentioned, such as were used in Greece. Terence, who imitated, rather than * translated Menander, chose however to preserve the scenery and manners of his original. The direct translator of Terence therefore has certainly no right to modernize his comedies, and instead of Græcian manners to substitute the French, English, or Italian. Yet this hath been the method pursued by most professed translators, though necessarily productive of two great inconveniencies: for first, it deprives the modern reader of the pleasure of directly comparing the manners and customs of another age and country with those of his own; and secondly, the ground of the play, the fable, characters, sentiments, and language, still retaining

* The ingenious Author of a commentary and notes on Horace's Art of Poetry asserts, p. 193. that "some of Terence's plays are "direct translations from Menander." This could proceed from nothing but mere inadvertence, since the slightest reflection must have convinced him, that the prologues of Terence point out some capital variations from the Greek, and the learned Critick himself has on other occasions taken notice of those variations. The old commentators have taken notice of many others, as will appear in the notes to this translation.

the antient cast, the result of this modernizing spirit is a fantastical medley, which represents the manners of no age or country at all.

Notwithstanding the acknowledged chastity of Terence, there are many things in these plays irreconcilable to modern notions of delicacy; and there is, even in his dialogue, so justly esteemed for its urbanity, many violations of the modern rules of politeness. “ The influence of modern “ manners (says an excellent writer) reaches even
“ to names and the ordinary forms of address.
“ In the Greek and Roman Dialogues, it was per“ mitted to accost the greatest persons by their “ obvious and familiar appellations. Alcibiades
“ had no more addition than Socrates: and Brutus
“ and Cæsar lost nothing of their dignity from “ being applied to in those direct terms. The “ Moderns, on the contrary, have their guards
“ and fences about them; and we hold it an “ incivility to approach them without some decent “ periphrasis, or ceremonial title.” * Many instances of this antient familiarity will occur in these

* Preface to Moral and Political Dialogues, by the Rev. Mr. Hurd.

comedies; and though I have sometimes rendered the here or hera of the original by the terms of Sir or Madam, yet the reader will commonly find the meanest slave accosting his master or mistress by their plain names without any more respectful addition.

The several allusions to antient customs are explained, as occasion requires; and the value of the coins is taken notice of the two or three first times that each species is mentioned: but as there is not one of the plays, wherein most of them do not very frequently occur, I have thought proper to insert in this place Cooke's Table of Attick Money, to be referred to at pleasure.

A Table of Sums in Attick Money, with their Proportion to English Money.

O B O L I.				l.	s.	d.	q.
1	-	-	-	00	00	01	$1\frac{1}{6}$
2	-	-	-	00	00	02	$2\frac{1}{3}$
3	-	-	-	00	00	03	$3\frac{1}{2}$
4	-	-	-	00	00	05	$4\frac{1}{2}$
5	-	-	-	00	00	06	$5\frac{1}{2}$
6 equal to a Drachma				00	00	07	3
D R A C H M A E.
1	-	-	-	00	00	07	3
10	-	-	-	00	06	05	2
100 equal to a Mina				03	04	07	0
M I N A E.
1	-	-	-	03	04	07	0
10	-	-	-	32	05	10	0
M I N A E.
20	-	-	-	64	11	08	0
60 equal to a Talent				193	15	00	0
T A L E N T A.
1	-	-	-	193	15	00	0
5	-	-	-	968	15	00	0
10	-	-	-	1937	10	00	0
15	-	-	-	2906	05	00	0
20	-	-	-	3875	00	00	0
100	-	-	-	19375	00	00	0

Terence mentions the Half Mina in his Adelphi, which was a single coin in proportion to

The Obolus was brass, the rest were silver.

On the whole it will appear, that it has been my chief study to exhibit Terence as nearly as possible in the same dress in which he appeared at Rome ; hoping that the learned reader may recognize his old acquaintance, and that I may be able to introduce to the unlearned, one so well worth his knowledge. I have tried, however the difficulty of the attempt may have baffled my endeavours, to catch the manner, as well as features, of my original. Some perhaps may think that, having once abandoned prose, I might have given still freer scope to my imagination, and have introduced more strokes of poetry : but such criticks must have very little considered the concise purity of Terence, the difficulty of preserving that proprietas verborum for which he is so remarkable, the nameless force even of adverbs and particles in his stile, and how dangerous it would be to attempt any additions or flourishes on his dialogue. I meant a direct translation, not a loose imitation ; and perhaps this version will be found in most instances to be more literal than the prose translations. The peculiar felicity of the mode I had embraced often gave me an opportunity of following the Author, without stiffness, in the arrangement of his words and sentences, and even of indulging myself, without affectation, in the elleipses, so frequent in his stile. In a word, if this version shall be allowed to have any merit, it is entirely owing to the strict adherence to the original.

The other circumstances necessary to be mentioned, for the better illustration of these Comedies, are chiefly relative to the representation. “Some (says Echard) object, that in the beginning of many scenes, two actors enter the stage, and talk to themselves a considerable time before they see or know one another; which, say they, is neither probable nor natural.---They, that object this, do not consider the difference betwixt our small scanty stage and the large magnificent Roman Theatres: their stage was sixty yards wide in front; their scenes so many streets meeting together, with by-lanes, rows, and alleys, so that two actors coming down two distinct streets or lanes, could not be seen by each other, though the spectators might see both; and sometimes if they did see each other, they could not well distinguish faces at sixty 4 “ yards

“ yards distance. Besides, on several accounts,
 “ it might well be supposed, when an actor en“ ters the stage, out of some house, he might “ take a turn or two under the porticoes, usual
 “ at that time, about his door, and not observe
 “ another actor on the other side of the stage.”*

To make the action, and business of the play still clearer, as well as to present the reader with some image of its effect in the representation, I have all along subjoined, according to the modern manner, marginal notes of direction. For this practice I have, in the proper place, given the reasons at large from an ingenious French Writer. It may be said indeed that a dramattick author should so frame his dialogue, as to make it evident by whom every part of it is spoken, to whom each speech is addressed, and the probable tone, gesture, and action assumed by the speaker. Allowing this to be strictly true, and always practicable, which is however a very doubtful point, I have annexed no directions of that sort, which may not be collected by an attentive reader from the text itself; and they who object to the use of these little cursory elucidations of the written or printed drama, might as well censure the prefixing the names of the particular character to the several speeches. These familiar directions, as they are the shortest, so are they the clearest interpreters of the conduct of the scene; and the want of them in the original text has on many occasions put the commentators to the expence of a very long note to explain, what the reader is thus made acquainted with, often by a single word.

* Preface to Terence, p. 10.

As to the habits of the actors, it is plain from Donatus, as well as the reason of the thing, that they were in general suited, according to the custom of the times and country, to the sex, age, and condition of the several characters. Some particulars, however, in their dress very essentially distinguish the antient players from those on any modern stage, viz. the Buskin, the Sock, and the Mask. The Buskin was a kind of high-heeled boot, worn only by the Tragedians; as the Sock was a sort of sandal peculiar to the actors in Comedy. Every player wore a Mask; of which the reader may form a better idea from the plates

I

prefixed

prefixed to each play, (which, as well as the Frontispiece, are faithfully engraved after the cuts in the Vatican Terence) than from any verbal description. It is plain, as Madam Dacier observes, that it was not like the modern Mask, which covers only the face, but enclosed the whole head, and had false hair fastened to it, agreeable to the visage and complection of the fore part. The Mask was called persona, from personare, to sound through, being so formed as to enlarge the voice, and convey it to a greater distance; a contrivance, which the vast extent of the antient theatres rendered extremely necessary. For the same reasons the features portrayed on the visor were so much aggravated beyond the proportion of those drawn by the hand of Nature. It must be confessed, that in these instances the Moderns have infinitely the advantage; and that by contracting the dimensions of their theatres, although they have a good deal abated the magnificence of the spectacle, they have been able to approach much nearer to the truth and simplicity of theatrical representation.

The Antient Drama was indeed, as a spectacle, extremely different from the Modern; and, on the stage, nearer approaching to the genius of our Opera, than Tragedy or Comedy; which circumstance, if duly considered, might have prevented a deal of idle disputation concerning the propriety of a Chorus. The antient plays, it is certain, were all accompanied with Musick; Aristotle mentions Musick as one of the fix parts of Tragedy, and we know from Horace, that the alterations in the Drama, Musick, and Decorations, kept pace with each other, and that in process of time, as the Roman Theatres were enlarged, their Musick also became more rich and full.
the

Tibia non, ut nunc, orichalco vinc̃ta, tubæque
 Æmula; sed tenuis, simplexq; foramine pauco
 Adspirare & adesse choris erat utilis, atque
 Nondum spissa nimis complere sedilia flatu:
 Quo sanè populus numerabilis, utpote parvus,
 Et frugi castusq; verecundusq; coibat.
 Postquam coepit agros extendere victor, & urbem
 Latior amplecti murus, vinoq; diurno
 Placari Genius festis impune diebus,
 Accessit numerisq; modisq; licentia major.

Indoctus

Indoctus quid enim sciret, liberq; laborum,
 Rusticus urbano confusus, turpis honesto?
 Sic priscae motumq; & luxuriam addidit arti
 Tibicen, traxitq; vagus per pulpita vestem:
 Sic etiam Fidibus voces crevere severis,
 Et tulit eloquium insolitum facundia praeceptis:
 Utiliumq; sagax rerum, ac divina futuri
 Sortilegis non discrepuit sententia Delphis. *

Nor was the Flute at first with silver bound,
 Nor rival'd emulous the trumpet's sound:
 Few were its notes, its form was simply plain;
 Yet not unuseful was its feeble strain
 To aid the Chorus, and their songs to raise:
 Filling the little theatre with ease:
 To which a thin and pious audience came,
 Of frugal manners, and unfullied fame.

But when victorious Rome enlarg'd her state,
 And broader walls enclos'd th' imperial seat,
 Soon as with wine, grown dissolutely gay,
 Without restraint she cheer'd the festal day,
 Then Poesy in looser numbers mov'd,
 And Musick in licentious tones improv'd:

* Hor. Art. Poet.

Such ever is the taste when clown and wit,
Rustick and critick, fill the crouded pit.

He who before with modest art had play'd,
Now call'd in wanton movements to his aid,
Fill'd with luxurious tones the pleasing strain,
And drew along the stage a length of train:
And thus the Lyre, once awfully severe,
Increas'd the strings, and sweeter charm'd the ear;
Thus Poetry precipitately flow'd,
And with unwonted elocution glow'd;
Pour'd forth prophetick truth in awful strain,
Dark as the language of the Delphick Fane.

FRANCIS.

In the above lines the two principal instruments in use on the theatre are mentioned, viz. Tibia, the Flute, and Fides, the Lyre. On so obscure a part of learning many doubts must necessarily have arisen; but the most probable opinion seems to be that the Flute was employed to accompany the declamation, or recitative, and the Lyre was peculiar to the Chorus: whence it happens that in the plays of Terence, as appears from the titles, only the Flutes were used; the Chorus,

Chorus, which made a part of the Old Comedy, as well as Tragedy, not being admitted into the New. The Comick Musick was certainly much more familiar than the Tragick; and on comparing the several authorities on this subject, it seems probable that the scenick modulation, as Quintilian calls it, in Comedy, was a kind of easy chant, calculated to assist the actors in the declamation, and to throw out the voice with force, in order to fill their ample theatres. Quintilian expressly tells us, that the declamation of the comick actors was nothing more than adding a certain theatrical grace to the manner of common conversation; not falling entirely into the ease of ordinary discourse, which would be inartificial, nor departing so far from nature as to lose the excellence of imitation. *

The English Reader will find, in the titles to these comedies, some expressions relative to the Musick, that may perhaps appear to him rather strange and uncouth; such as---Flutes Equal or

* Actores Comici—nec ita prorsus, ut nos vulgo loquimur, pronuntiant, quod esset sine arte: nec procul tamen a natura rece-dunt, quo vitio periret imitatio: sed morem communis hujus sermonis decore quodam scenico exornant.

QUINTIL. Inst. Orat. lib. II. cap. 10.

Unequal, Right or Left-Handed;---but they are the only words that could be used with any propriety to translate the original names of the instruments; and yet even those words, uncouth as they are, are not intelligible without some further explanation; and, to mend the matter, that further explanation is so difficult to be obtained, that the learned Monf. Le Fevre wrote a most elegant copy of Latin Verses, execrating the Flute, and all the commentators on it.

The short account from Donatus, which I have subjoined to the title to the Andrian, shews that the Right-handed Flutes were the proper accompaniments to comedies of a graver cast, and the Left-Handed to those of more pleasantry. Montfaucon * observes, that the Flute took its original name, Tibia, from being anciently made of the leg of some animal, as a horse, a dog, &c. † He seems

* MONTFAUCON, Tome 3me parte 2de. p. 342.

† This is the ground of a conceit in one of the Fables of Phædrus on a minstrel's breaking his leg.

Princeps Tibicen notior paulo fuit,
Operam Bathyllo solitus in scenâ dare.

Is forte ludis (non satis memini quibus)
Dum pegma rapitur, concidit casu gravi
Nec opinans, et sinistram fregit tibiam;
Duas cum dextras maluisset perdere.

PHÆDRUS. Lib. v. Fab. 7.

Here the whole joke consists in sinistra tibia signifying a left-handed flute and the minstrel's left leg.

at a loss to conceive how a double flute could create an agreeable harmony, but believes it to have been even more common in use than the single; though he supposes that the two flutes were in fact separated, but that the several pipes of each joined in the mouth of the player. To this account he annexes the figure of a Choraules, or Chief Minstrel, who holds in each hand a pipe without holes, much in the shape of a modern post-horn.

In order to give as plain an idea as possible of the Musick to the Antient Comedies, I have subjoined to this preface a plate containing three Musical Figures taken from an Italian treatise on the Theatrical Masks and Comick Figures of the Romans, by Francisco de Ficoroni.* The Figure at top is that of a Female-Minstrel, playing on two Unequal Flutes; and is copied from a very antient bas-relief in marble, preserved among the curious pieces of sculpture in the Farnese Palace: The whole marble contains five figures, and represents a scene in the last act of the Andrian, where mente da Francesco De Ficoroni. In Roma, 1736.

* Le Maschere Sceniche e le Figure Comiche D'Antichi Romani, descritte breve-

Simo calls forth Dromo to carry off Davus to punishment. On one side Dromo, with a kind of knotted cord in his hand, which is raised in the air and seems threatening to fall heavy on Davus, is hurrying him away. On the other side appears the enraged Simo, with Chremes endeavouring to moderate his anger; and in the middle the Minstrel, playing as in the annexed plate. The dress of the Minstrel (although here a female one) is exactly conformable to the description of the habit of the Minstrel by Horace,

---Traxitq; vagus per pulpita vestem.

And drew along the stage a length of train.

In the original plate she is turned towards the two slaves; and seems intending to keep time with Dromo's blows, or, as Ficoroni supposes, to exhilarate the spectators between the several strokes.*

The female figure on the left, bearing two Unequal Flutes in her hand, represents, (as

* Ficoroni, p. 27.

Ficoroni supposes* from her flowing hair being collected in a knot behind, as well as from a Satyrick Mask, which in the original Cameo, whence the plate is taken, stands by her side) a Minstrel employed in the Satyrick Drama, a kind of Serious Pastoral much in favour on the Roman Stage, and of which Horace has spoken very largely in his Art of Poetry. This figure seems to confirm the conjecture of Montfaucon, that the Double Flutes were in fact two distinct instruments, and that the pipes of each joined in the mouth of the minstrel.

The figure on the right is copied from a mutilated marble containing a Greek Inscription, ΚΑΤ. ΠΡΟ. ΙΖ. ΚΑΛ. ΑΠΡΙΛΙΩΝ. which inscription, as it records no name, nor bears any other mark of those used on funeral occasions, † Ficoroni supposes to be intended to record some theatrical exhibition on the time there mentioned, which was seventeen days before the Calends of April, being equal to our Sixteenth of March, and the time of the celebration of the Liberalia, or Games in Honour of Bacchus, in Antient Rome.

* Ficoroni, p. 118.

† Ibid. p. 196.

I have given these two last figures to shew the various forms, as well as improvements of the Flute. Those in the hands of the Pastoral Minstrel have but three stops; but that in the right hand of the mutilated figures has seven; which confirms the observation of the learned Montfaucon, who tells us that the Flute had at first three holes, but that they were afterwards multiplied to seven, and even to ten: In another part of Ficoroni's* book is a figure, which seems to be that of a Vain-Glorious Soldier, a very common character in the comedies of the Ancients, singing to a minstrel playing on Double Flutes, which by their shape and size seem to have been those large trumpet-toned instruments in use in the days of Horace.

As to the manner in which these Flutes were used,* Ficoroni observes from Diomedes the Grammarian, that by Flutes equal, or unequal, was meant, that in Soliloquy the minstrel blew only one pipe, and in Dialogue both. It should seem also that the Soliloquies, like the Airs in our Opera, had more laboured accompaniments than the Dialogue, or common Recitative; for Donatus has informed us DIVERBIA histriones pronuntiabant : CANTICA vero temperabantur modis non a poetâ, sed a perito artis musicæ factis. Neque enim omnia ijsdem modis in uno cantico agebantur, sed sæpe mutatis. Ut significant qui tres numeros in comædijs ponunt, qui tres continent mutatos modos cantici illius. The import of this passage is explained by Diomedes, who tells us that Diverbia signifies the Dialogue, and Cantica the Soliloquies. * Of this technical sense of the word Canticum I confess I was not at all aware, when I wrote the notes to the Brothers; nor, it is evident, was Madam Dacier; who has also, in her account of the Musick, in the notes to the Andrian, mistaken the meaning of Flutes equal or unequal, right or left-handed, supposing them synonymous terms; whereas it is plain from Diomedes that the Equal or Unequal meant the Single or Double Flute, and from Donatus that the Right-Handed signified those used in the more Serious comedy, and the Left-Handed those used in the more Pleasant.

* Pag. 29.

† Pag. 30.

It is plain also, from the lines above cited from Horace, that the Minstrel did not content himself with playing on the Flutes, but accompanied his Musick with some gesture suitable to the action of the scene.

* Diverbia partes Comœdiarum sunt, in quibus plures personæ versantur; Cantica, in quibus una tantum.

—priscæ motumq; & luxuriam addidit arti
Tibicen.

---call'd in wanton movements to his aid.

“ Of the use and propriety of these gestures, says the ingenious Annotator on the Art of Poetry whom I have often cited, “ it will not be “ easy for us, who see no such things attempted “ on the modern stage, to form any very clear or “ exact notions.” * Here therefore I shall conclude this preface, and take my leave of the Ancient Musick, referring the curious reader to the several commentators on Horace and Aristotle, and to those authors who have written expressly on this subject; which it is needless to pursue any further in this place, as it is now of no great consequence to the reader of the Comedies of Terence.

* HURD's Notes on the Art of Poetry, p. 150.

End of Preface.

T H E

L I F E O F T E R E N C E .

T H E
L I F E
O F
T E R E N C E.
TRANSLATED FROM
S U E T O N I U S.*

PU B L I U S Terentius Afer was born at Carthage, and was a slave of Terentius Lucanus, a Roman Senator; † who, perceiving him to have an excellent understanding and a great deal of wit, not only bestowed on him a liberal education, but gave him his g freedom

* By Suetonius.] This life of our Author is not very satisfactory; but as all that has been said of him by other writers is chiefly taken from it, I thought it better to follow the example of Madam Dacier in giving a translation of this account, with a few supplementary notes, than to pretend to attempt an alteration, where I could make no material addition.

This life of Terence is by some attributed to Donatus.

† A Roman Senator.] This Senator gave our Author the name of Terence, according
to freedom in the very early part of his life. Some writers are of opinion that he was taken prisoner in battle, but Fenestella * proves this to be impossible, since Terence was born after the second Punick war, and died before the commencement of the third. † But even supposing that he had been taken by the Numidians, ‡ or Getulians, he could not have fallen into the hands of a Roman commander, § since there was little or no communication between the Romans and Africans till after the entire destruction of Carthage.

Our Poet was beloved and much esteemed by noblemen to the prevailing custom among the Romans, whenever they conferred freedom on their slaves. His real name we are entirely unacquainted with; and it is somewhat extraordinary that a Poet of such distinguished merit should want a friend to hand it down to us; and that, by a singular fatality, he who could stamp immortality on the name of his master, should be unable to continue his own. DACIER.

* Lucius Fenestella.] He was one of the most accurate historians and antiquaries the Romans ever had: he flourished towards the end of Augustus' reign, or in the beginning of that of Tiberius; he wrote many things, especially annals; but time has deprived us of them all. DACIER.

† The second Punick War.] This ended in the year of Rome 552; 196 years before the birth of Christ; and the third began in the year of Rome 603; an interval of fifty-one years, which both saw the birth and death of Terence. It is evident he died in the year of Rome 594, while Cn. Corn. Dolabella and M. Fulvius were consuls, at the age of thirty-five; nine years before the third Punick war. He was born consequently in the year of Rome 560, eight years after the second Punick war. DACIER.

‡ Numidians, &c.] The Carthaginians (between the second and third Punick war) were in continual broils with the Numidians or Getulians, and consequently Terence might be taken prisoner in some one of these skirmishes by the Numidian troops.

DACIER.

§ Roman commander.] This is a very undecided way of reasoning: for though it is very certain that the Romans, before the entire demolition of Carthage, had very little intercourse with Africa, they might, without any great difficulty, have purchased a slave. It is well known that ambassadors were sent from Rome to Carthage at two or three different times, in order to settle some differences subsisting between them and the Numidians. Where then is the improbability of a Numidian's selling a slave, he had taken from the Carthaginians, to one of the Romans? Nothing more probable.

DACIER.

of the first rank in the Roman Commonwealth; and lived in a state of great intimacy with Scipio Africanus, and C. Lælius, * to whom the beauty of his person also is supposed to have recommended him: which Fenestella lays to his charge, asserting that Terence was older than either of them. † Corn. Nepos on the contrary writes that they were nearly of an age, and Porcius gives us room to suspect such a familiarity between them by the following lines.

*Dum lasciviam nobilium & fucosas laudes petit:
Dum Africani voci divinæ inbiat avidis auribus:
Dum ad Furium ‡ se cœnitare, & Lælium pulcrum putat:
Dum se amari ab hisce credit, crebrò in Albanum rapi
Ob florem ætatis suæ; ad summam inopiam redactus est.
Itaque e conspectu omnium abiit in Græciæ terram ultimam.
Mortuus est in Stympalo, Arcadiæ oppido.—*

Seeking the pleasures and deceitful praise
Of nobles, while the Bard with greedy ears
Drinks in the voice divine of Africanus,
Happy to sup with Furius ‡ and with Lælius,

* To whom the beauty of his person, &c.] Madam Dacier, (from a female delicacy, I suppose) has entirely altered this circumstance; and there is, in her translation of this life from Suetonius, scarce the shadow of this imputation on our Author either in the text, or the verses introduced on purpose to support it.

† Older than either of them.] Terence was nine years older than Scipio, the son of Paulus Æmilius, the person here meant, who was not born till the year of Rome 569. We are not quite so positive as to the age of Lælius. DACIER.

‡ Furius Publius.] A man of great rank and quality; not Aulus Furius Antia, or the Marcus Furius Bibaculus mentioned by Horace. DACIER.

Caref'd, and often, for his bloom of youth,
 Whirl'd to Mount Alba ; amidst all these joys,
 He finds himself reduc'd to poverty.
 Wherefore withdrawing from all eyes, and flying
 To the extremest parts of Greece, he dies
 At Stymphalus, a village in Arcadia.

He wrote six comedies. When he offered his first play, which was the Andrian, to the Ædiles, he was ordered to read it to Cæcilius. * When he arrived at that Poet's house, he found him at table ; and it is said that our Author, being very meanly dressed, was suffered to read the opening of his play, seated on a very low stool, near the couch of Cæcilius : but scarce had he repeated a few lines, than Cæcilius invited him to sit down to supper with him, after which Terence proceeded with his play, and finished it to the no small admiration of Cæcilius. His six plays † were equally admired by the Romans ; though Volcatius ‡ in his remarks on those plays says,

* Read it to Cæcilius.] Cæcilius died two years before the representation of the Andrian. It is therefore a very plausible, as well as ingenious, correction of Vossius, to read Acilius, the name of one of the Ædiles, the year of the exhibition of that play.

† Six plays equally admired.] It would not be easy to decide which of the six is the best ; since each of them has its peculiar beauty. The Andrian and Brothers seem to excell in beauty of character : the Eunuch and Phormio, in the vivacity of intrigue : and the Self-Tormentor and Step-Mother have, in my mind, the advantage in sentiment, a lively painting of the passions, and in the purity, and delicacy of stile. DACIER.

‡ Volcatius.] Volcatius Sedigitus, a very antient poet, though we do not precisely know the time in which he lived. In his judgment of the Comick Poets, he gives the first place to Cæcilius, the second to Plautus, the third to Nævius, the fourth to Licinius, the fifth to Atilius ; and ranks Terence but the sixth. But Volcatius has done more discredit to himself by this judgment, than honour to Cæcilius, and the other writers whom he has preferred to Terence. Each of them might have some excellencies that our Author did not possess ; but on the whole the Romans had no Comick Poet equal to Terence.

DACIER.

Sumetur Hecyra sexta ex iis fabula.

—————“ The Step-Mother,
“ The last, and least in merit of the Six.

The Eunuch met with such remarkable success, that it was acted twice in one day, and Terence was paid for it 8000 sesterces, being more than was ever paid for any comedy before; * for which reason the sum is recorded in the title † of that play. Varro prefers the beginning of the Brothers to the beginning of the original of Menander.

It is pretty commonly said, that Scipio and Lælius, with whom he lived in such familiarity, assisted our Author ‡ in his plays, and indeed Terence himself increased that suspicion, by the little pains he took to refute it, witness the Prologue to the Brothers: § though he might probably have acted thus, knowing that such an opinion was not unplea-

* 8000 sesterces.] About 60l. of our money.

† Recorded in the title.] Not as the title now stands, which shews that the titles now come down to us, are imperfect.

TANAQUIL FABER.

‡ Assisted our Author.] There might be some foundation for such a report. Both Scipio and Lælius might have assisted him in polishing his style, and even have supplied him with many a line: being an African, he might not have so thorough a knowledge of the elegancies and beauties of the Latin language. This reasoning however is to me by no means conclusive. Phædrus was a Thracian slave, yet no one wrote more correctly or with greater purity; nor was he ever taxed with having received any assistance in his compositions: why then suspect Terence, when Suetonius, in the very beginning of his life, confesses he had been very carefully educated, and made free in his very early youth by Terentius Lucanus? DACIER, § Witness the Prologue to the Brothers.] But in the Prologue to the Self-Tormentor he is not so complaisant; but flatly declares the report malicious, and intreats his Audience not to give the least credit to idle and malicious tales. DACIER.

sing to those great men. Be that as it may, this opinion gained ground, * and has continued down to our times.

Quintus Memmius, † in an oration written in his own defence, positively declares that Scipio wrote the plays for his amusement, which he permitted Terence to father : Corn. Nepos asserts that he had been informed from very good authority, that Lælius, being at his Villa, at Puzzuoli, on a certain first day of March, ‡ was requested by his Lady to sup sooner than at his usual hour, but he intreated her not to interrupt his studies : Coming into supper rather late, he declared he had never employed his time in writing with better success than he had then done ; and being asked what it was, § he repeated those verses in the Self-Tormentor, Satis pol protervè me Syri promissa huc induxerunt.

Santra || observes, that if Terence had needed any assistance

* Opinion gained ground.] Valgius, a contemporary Poet to Horace, expressly says,

*Hæ quæ vocantur fabulæ, cujus sunt ?
Non has, qui jura populis recensens dabat,
Honore summo affectus, fecit fabulas ?*

And whose then are these pieces?--Did not He, Who, full of honours, gave the people laws, Compose these Comedies ?

DACIER.

† Q. Memmius.] Most probably the Grandfather to that Memmius to whom the Poem of Lucretius is inscribed.

DACIER.

‡ A certain first day of March.] The first day of March was a holiday kept by the Roman ladies, who on that occasion claimed the privilege of being entire mistresses of their houses, and directed every thing for that day. DACIER.

§ Repeated those verses, &c.] This may be. In the plays of Moliere perhaps might be found some lines written by his friends ; yet nobody would pretend to say that those pieces were not written by Moliere. DACIER.

|| Santra.] An Author of the time of Julius Cæsar. He wrote a treatise on the antiquity of words, and the lives of illustrious men : but his works are all lost. DACIER.

in the composition of his plays, he would not have applied to Scipio * and Lælius, who were at that time very young, but rather to C. Sulpicius Gallus, † a man of sound learning, and who was the first person that introduced plays at the Consular Games; or to ‡ Marcus Popilius Lenas, or to Q. Fabius Labeo, § both men of Consular dignity, and excellent Poets. Terence himself intimates, speaking of those who were supposed to assist him, that they were not young men, but persons whose abilities had been experienced by the Publick in peace, war, and business of state.

To wipe off the aspersions of plagiarism, or perhaps to make himself a master of the customs and manners of the Grecians, in order to delineate them the better in his writings, he left Rome in the thirty-fifth year of his age, after having exhibited the six comedies which are now extant; and he never returned more.

* Would not have applied to Scipio.] This reasoning of Santra proves nothing: for when Terence commenced Author, Scipio was at the age of twenty-one; and besides having been extremely well educated, was possessed of an extraordinary genius. DACIER.

Pastorals and little poems may perhaps now and then be written at sixteen or eighteen, but it must be allowed that the age of twenty-one is a very early period for the production of such dramatick pieces as those of Terence. Besides, when the Andrian was first exhibited, our Author was but twenty-seven, and Madam Dacier herself tells us that he was nine years older than Scipio, who therefore could be no more than eighteen years of age, a time of life when men rather begin to be the subjects, than the cultivators of the Comick Muse,

† C. Sulpicius Gallus.] The same Sulpicius Gallus, who was consul at the time of the first exhibition of the Andrian. DACIER.

‡ M. Popilius Lenas.] Consul in the year of Rome 581, when Terence was at the age of twenty-one. DACIER.

§ Q. Fabius Labeo.] A man of very distinguished merit, who passed the offices of Quæstor, Prætor, Triumvir, Consul and High Priest; and commanded the Roman troops with reputation. History fixes his consulship in the year of Rome 570: his Colleague was M. Claud. Marcellus. Terence at that time was but ten years old.

DACIER.

Volcatius speaks of his death in the following manner :

*Sed ut Afer sex populo edidit comœdias,
Iter hinc in Asiam fecit : navim cum semel Conscendit, visus nunquam est. Sic vita vacat.*

But Terence, having given the town six plays,
Voyag'd for Asia : but when once embark'd,
Was ne'er seen afterwards. He died at sea.

Q. Confetius * says, that he died at sea in his return from Greece, whence he was bringing one hundred and eight plays, † translated from Menander. Others again assert that he died at Stymphalus in Arcadia, during the Consulship of Cn. Cornelius Dolabella, and M. Fulvius Nobilior, ‡ for grief, having lost the comedies he had translated, as well as those he had himself written.

He is said to have been of a middle stature, genteel, and of a swarthy complexion. He left a daughter, who was afterwards married to a Roman Knight ; and at the time of his death he was possessed of an house together with a garden containing six acres of land on the Appian way, close by the Villa Martis. It is very extraordinary therefore that Porcius should say,

* Q. Confetius.] This Author I am quite a stranger to. DACIER.

Terence had already exhibited four. This story therefore must be a mere fable.

DACIER.

† One hundred and eight plays.] Menander wrote but one hundred and nine plays himself, some say but one hundred and eight, and others but one hundred and five, of which

‡ The consulship of Dolabella, &c.] In the year of Rome 594, the year after the exhibition of the Brothers. DACIER.

— Nil Publius

Scipio profuit, nil ei Lælius, nil Furius :

Tres per idem tempus qui agitabant nobiles facillime.

Eorum ille operâ ne domum quidem habuit conductitiam :

Saltem ut esset, quo referret obitum domini servulus.

Nothing did Publius Scipio profit him,
 Nothing did Lælius, nothing Furius,
 At once the three great patrons of our Bard ;
 And yet so niggard of their bounties to him,
 He had not even wherewithal to hire
 A house in Rome, to which a faithful slave
 Might bring the tidings of his master's death.

* Afranius in his Compitalia † prefers him to all the Comick Poets.

Terentio non similem dices quempiam.

To Terence you can shew no parallel.

But Volcatius not only places him after Nævius, Plautus, and Cæcilius, but even after Licinius. ‡ Cicero in his Leimon, § a work in which he drew the characters of the most illustrious men, speaks of Terence thus,

Tu

* Afranius.] A Dramatick Poet of great reputation, whose testimony is the more honourable, as he was a cotemporary of our author, though much younger. DACIER.

† Compitalia.] Feasts in cross-streets and ways, celebrated the second day of January, in honour of their Rural Gods, hence called Lares, or Compitalitii. AINSWORTHUS.

‡ Licinius.] Licinius Imbrex, who flourished in the year of Rome, 554. DACIER.

§ Leimon.] A Greek word [λεῖμον] signifying a meadow. This work of Cicero h contained

*Tu quoque, qui solus lecto sermone, Terenti,
Conversum expressumque Latinâ voce Menandrum
In medio populi sedatis vocibus effers;
Quidquid come loquens, ac omnia dulcia dicens.*

And thou, O Terence, couldst alone transfuse
The Attick Graces to the Latin Tongue,
And bring Menander to the ear of Rome:
Such purity, such sweetness in thy stile!

C. Cæsar in like manner,

Tu quoque, tu in summis, O dimidiate Menander, Poneris, & merito, puri sermonis amator.

contained, most probably, nothing but the praises of eminent men. These beautiful verses are imitated by Aufonius, and Cæsar begins his criticism on Terence in the very same terms. For it is certain that Cæsar only undertook that task in order to imitate and contradict Cicero. DACIER.

[Vossius considers this as an Erratum, and tells us that this work of Tully was not called Leimon but Libo, and was addressed to Terentius Libo, a poet of that time, and a native of Fregellæ.]

☞ Before we conclude these notes, it will be proper to take notice of a passage in Orofius, which has misled many concerning our Poet. This historian, though none of the most correct, yet not without merit, writes thus: Scipio jam cognomento Africanus, triumphans urbem ingressus est, quem Terentius, qui postea Comicus, ex nobilibus Carthaginensium captivis, pileatus, quod indultæ sibi libertatis insigne fuit, triumphantem post currum secutus est. “ Scipio “ Africanus entered Rome in triumph, and “ was attended by Terence, one of the chief “ of the Carthaginian captives, who afterwards became the celebrated Comick “ Poet, wearing a cap on his head, as a “ mark of his freedom having been conferred on him.” This is undoubtedly fabulous, take it which way you will. For if Orofius means Scipio the Elder, his triumph was in the year of Rome 552, eight years before Terence was born. If he speaks of the Younger Scipio, the son of Paulus Æmilius, his triumphal entry was in the year of Rome 637, thirteen years after the death of Terence. What hurried Orofius into the mistake, is a passage in Livy, which he did not attentively examine. This great historian in his 30th book and 45th Chapter says, Secutus Scipionem triumphantem est, pileo capiti imposito, Q. Terentius Culleo; omnique deinde vitâ, ut dignum erat, libertatis auctorem coluit. “ Q. Terentius Culleo followed the “ triumphal car of Scipio on the day of his “ publick entrance into Rome, with a cap “ on his head, and honoured him during the “ remainder of his life as the author of his “ freedom.” It could not therefore be our Terence, of whom Livy is speaking. It was a Roman senator, who having been taken prisoner by the Carthaginians, and set free by Scipio, determined to grace his deliverer’s triumph, which he attended wearing the cap of liberty on his head, by way of compliment, as if he had indeed really received his manumission from the hands of Scipio.

DACIER.

Lenibus

*Lenibus atque utinam scriptis adjuncta foret vis
Comica, ut æquato virtus polleret honore
Cum Græcis, neque in hæc despectus parte jaceres :
* Unum hoc maceror & doleo tibi deesse, Terenti.*

And Thou, oh Thou among the first be plac'd,
Ay and deservedly, thou Half-Menander !
Lover of purest dialogue.---And oh,
That Humour had gone hand in hand with ease
In all thy writings ! that thy Muse might stand
In equal honour with the Græcian stage,
Nor Thou be robb'd of more than half thy fame !
---This only I lament, and this, I grieve,
There's wanting in thee, Terence !

* Unum hoc maceror, &c.] Valeat Sedigitus, nos Afranio assentiri non pigeat, ac Terentium omnibus præstitisse Comicis credamus; neque vim illam comicam, quam ei unam defuisse dolet Cæsar (si modo sunt illa Cæsar's carmina) desideremus. Nihil illi defuit: omnia quæ Comico Poetæ præstanda sunt, præstitit.

FRANCISCUS ASULANUS.

E R R A T A.

In the last note to the Prologue to the Andrian, for no remains read scarce any remains— for fat p. 12. l. 6. read set—p. 16. l. 8. for how offended? father! read how offended, father?
 —p. 17. last line, for why so! read why so?—p. 34. l. 1. at He is in love. with your bride, Sir.
 dele the full point after love—p. 45. l. 3. for turth read truth.—p. 52. last line but one, for your contrivance. read your contrivance?—p. 64. the last line but two of the notes, for concludes read concludes—p. 82. l. 13. for fat foot read set foot—p. 93. before the last speech, for Chremes read Crito—p. 100. the last line but two of the notes, for writer of a Comedy read a writer of Comedy—To the Persons of the Eunuch add Pamphila—p. 115. l. 8. supply * a note of reference, and in the last line of the note itself for growing read blowing—p. 118. l. 11. for lage read large—p. 122. l. 11, and 12. for ought read aught—p. 127. after Enter Gnatho supply leading Pamphila—p. 151. l. 13. for To 'squire read T' escort—p. 167. the last line but three, for Pyth. read Phæd.—p. 175. the last line but two, after within, at my house add a full point instead of an interrogation—p. 185. l. 14. for fat read set—p. 200. the last line but three, after slave add a comma—p. 204. for still I read I still—p. 221. l. 16. of the second column of notes, for opennig read opening—p. 333. l. 15. for All the whole town cries shame read The whole town cries out shame—p. 361. last line but one, after So add a note of admiration So!—p. 387.
 l. 4. for he lives at Miletus read he is of Miletus—p. 396. twice in the last note, for chord read cord—From p. 440 to p. 465. correct the intermediate pages from 341, 342, &c. to 441, 442, &c. — p. 469. for Piræum read Piræus — p. 608. l. 5. after husband dele the full point —In the Preface, p. xiv. l. 2. for iambicks read iambick—p. xxv. l. 4. for full read free—
 p. xxvi. l. 13. for earnæd read learned—p. xliii. l. 16. for Francisco read Francesco—p. xlv.
 l. 5. for figures read figure—

Andrian.

T H E

A N D R I A N.

T H E A N D R I A N ; *

Acted at the MEGALESIAN GAMES, †

M. Fulvius and M. Glabrio, Curule Ædiles : ‡ Principal
Actors, L. Ambivius Turpio and L. Attilius Prænestinus :
The Musick, § composed for Equal Flutes, Right and

* The Andrian.] There is much controversy among the Criticks, whether the Andrian was the first play, which Terence produced, or only the first of those which have come down to our times. Donatus positively asserts it to be our author's first production, and adds that the favourable reception it met with, encouraged him to go on in writing for the Stage. He tells us also that this Piece was entitled "The Andrian of Terence," and not "Terence's Andrian," according to the custom of the Romans, who placed the name of the Play first, if it was written by an author, yet unknown in the Theatrical world, but placed the author's name first in the title, if it was one already celebrated. Madam Dacier is of a contrary opinion, and thinks that the introductory lines of the Prologue make it evident that Terence had written before. These inquiries are little more than mere matter of curiosity. For my part, I am rather inclined to the opinion of Donatus. The objections of Lavinus, which Terence in his Prologue endeavours to refute, are entirely confined to this play; and that it was possible for Lavinus to have seen the manuscript before the representation is evident from the Prologue to the Eunuch, where Terence directly charges that circumstance to his adversary. The concluding lines of the Prologue speak the language of an author, new in the Drama, much stronger than those in the beginning denote his having written before. It may be remembered also, that Terence was no more than 27 years of age at the time of the first representation of this comedy.

Both the English and French Theatres have borrowed the Fable of this Play. Sir Richard Steele has raised on that foundation his Comedy of the Conscious Lovers; and Baron has adopted even the Title. It is proposed to throw out some observations on each of these pieces, and to compare them with Terence's comedy, in the course of these notes.

† The Megalesian Games were those instituted in honour of the Superior Gods.

‡ The Ædiles were Magistrates of Rome, whose office it was to take care of the city, its public Buildings, &c. to regulate the market, and to preside at solemn games, public entertainments, &c.

§ No part of the history of the antient Drama is more obscure, than that which relates to the Musick. A short extract from Donatus will serve to give some explanation of the phrases used in the above title. "They were "acted to Flutes equal or unequal, right or "left-handed. The Right-handed, or Ly-
"dian, by their grave tone, denounced the "serious stile of the comedy. The Left-"handed, or Tyrian, by their light sharp
B sound,

Left-handed, by Flaccus, Freedman to Claudius: It is wholly Grecian: * Published, M. Marcellus and Cn. Sulpicius, Consuls.

Year of Rome - - 587

Before Christ - - - 162

Author's Age - - - 27

“ found, denoted the vivacity of the piece.

“ But when the play was said to be acted

“ to both Right and Left-handed, it denoted

“ it to be Serio-Comick.

* It is wholly Grecian.] That is, that species of Comedy, which was called Palliata; in which the Habits, Manners, and Arguments, were all Græcian.

TO THE
STUDENTS OF CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD,

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS HUMBL Y INSCRIBED,

BY THEIR MOST OBEDIENT SERVANT,

AND FELLOW-STUDENT,

GEORGE COLMAN.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE.

SIMO.

PAMPHILUS.

CHREMES.

CHARINUS.

CRITO.

SOSIA.

DAVUS.

BYRRHIA.

DROMO.

SERVANTS &c.

GLYCERIUM.

MYSSIS.

LESBIA.

ARCHYLLIS.

SCENE, ATHENS.

P R O L O G U E.

THE Bard, when first he gave his mind to write,
Thought it his only business, that his Plays
Shou'd please the people: But it now falls out,
He finds, much otherwise, and wastes, perforce,
His time in writing Prologues; not to tell
The argument, but to refute the slanders
Broach'd by the malice of an older Bard.*

And mark what vices he is charg'd withall!
Menander wrote the Andrian and Perinthian: †
Know one, and you know both; in argument
Less diff'rent than in sentiment and stile.
What suited with the Andrian he confesses
From the Perinthian he transferr'd, and us'd
For his: and this it is these slanders blame,

* Of an older Bard.] This old Arch-adversary of Terence was, according to Donatus, Lucius Lavinius; but, according to Madam Dacier, Lulcius Lanuvinus.

† Menander wrote the Andrian and Perinthian.] From this account it is plain, that Terence did not in this play weave two different stories of Menander together in that vicious manner which is generally imputed to him: but that the argument of these two plays being nearly the same, Terence having pitched upon the Andrian for the Groundwork of his

Fable, enriched it with such parts of the Perinthian, as naturally fell in with that plan. We are told by Donatus, that the first scene of our Author's Andrian, is almost a literal translation of the first scene of the Perinthian of Menander, in which the Old Man discoursed with his wife, just as Simo does with Sofia. In the Andrian of Menander the Old Man opened with a soliloquy.

The Perinthian, as well as the Andrian, took its name from the place the woman came from; viz. Perinthus, a town of Thrace.

Proving

P R O L O G U E.

Proving by deep and learned disputation,
 That Fables shou'd not be contaminated.
 Troth! all their knowledge is they nothing know:
 Who, blaming him, blame * Nævius, Plautus, Ennius,
 Whose great example is his precedent;
 Whose negligence he'd wish to emulate
 Rather than their dark diligence. Henceforth,
 Let them, I give them warning, be at peace,
 And cease to rail, lest they be made to know
 Their own misdeeds. Be favourable! fit
 With equal mind, and hear our play; that hence
 Ye may conclude, what hope to entertain,
 The comedies he may hereafter write
 Shall merit approbation or contempt.

* Nævius, Plautus, Ennius.] These poets are not mentioned here in exact chronological order, Ennius being elder than Plautus. The first author, who brought a regular play on the Roman stage, is said to have been Livius Andronicus, about the year of Rome 510, and one year before the birth of Ennius. Five years after the representation of the first play of Andronicus, or as some say nine, Nævius wrote for the stage. Then followed Ennius, Plautus, Pacuvius, Cæcilius, Porcius Licinius, Terence, and his cotemporary and adversary Lucius Lavinius, Accius, Afranius, &c. Of all these, many of whom were very eminent writers, we have no remains, except of Plautus and Terence: and what is still more to be lamented, the inestimable Greek Authors, whose writings were the rich source, whence they drew their fable, characters, &c. are also irrecoverably lost.

T H E

T H E A N D R I A N.

A C T I. S C E N E I.

SIMO, SOSIA, and Servants with Provisions.

Simo. CARRY those things in: go! [*Ex. Servants.]
Sofia, come here;

A Word with you!

Sofia. I understand: that these
Be ta'en due care of. †

* Exeunt Servants.] The want of marginal directions, however trifling they may at first sight appear, has occasioned, as it necessarily must, much confusion and obscurity in several passages of the antient Dramatick Writers: and is a defect in the manuscripts, and old editions of those authors in the learned languages, which has in vain been attempted to be supplied by long notes of laborious commentators, and delineations of the figures of the characters employed in each scene. This simple method of illustrating the dialogue, and rendering it clear and intelligible to the most ordinary reader, I propose to pursue throughout this translation: And I cannot better enforce the utility of this practice, than by a few extracts from a very ingenious treatise on Dramatick Poetry, written in French by Mons. Diderot, and annex to his Play, called the Father of a Family.

“ The Pantomime is a part of the Drama, to which the author ought to pay the most serious attention: for if it is not always present to him, he can neither begin, nor conduct, nor end a scene according to truth and nature; and the action should frequently be written down instead of dialogue.

“ The Pantomime should be written down, whenever it creates a picture; whenever it gives energy, or clearness, or connection to the Dialogue; whenever it paints character; whenever it consists in a delicate play, which the reader cannot himself supply; whenever it stands in the place of an answer; and almost always at the beginning of a scene.

“ Whether a poet has written down the Pantomime or not, it is easy to discover at first sight, whether he has composed after it. The conduct of the piece will not be the same; the scenes will have another turn; the Dialogue will relish of it.”

Moliere, as this ingenious Critick observes, has always written down the Pantomime, (as he phrases it) and Terence seems plainly to have had it always in his view, and to have paid a constant attention to it in his compositions, though he has not set it down in words.

† Be ta'en due care of.] Nempe ut curentur recte hæc. Madam Dacier will have it that Simo here

Simo. Quite another thing.

Sofia. What can my art do more for you?

Simo. This business

Needs not that art; but those good qualities,
Which I have ever known abide in you,
Fidelity and secrecy.

Sofia. I wait

Your pleasure.

Simo. Since I bought you, from a boy
How just and mild a servitude you've pass'd
With me, you're conscious: from a purchas'd slave
I made you free, because you serv'd me freely:
The greatest recompence I cou'd bestow.

Sofia. I do remember.

Simo. Nor do I repent.

Sofia. If I have ever done, or now do aught
That's pleasing to you, Simo, I am glad,
And thankful that you hold my Service good.
And yet this troubles me: for this detail,
Forcing your kindness on my memory,
Seems to reproach me of ingratitude.*

here makes use of a kitchen-term in the word curentur. I believe it rather means to take care of any thing generally; and at the conclusion of this very scene, Sofia uses the word again speaking of things very foreign to cookery. Sat est, CURABO."

* Seems to reproach me of ingratitude.] There is a beautiful passage in the Duke of Milan of Massinger very similar to the above. The situations of the persons are somewhat alike, Sforza being on the point of opening his mind to Francisco. The English Poet has with great address

Oh tell me then at once, what wou'd you? Sir!

Simo. I will; and this I must advise you first:
The nuptial you suppose preparing now,
Is all unreal.

Sofia. Why pretend it then?

Simo. You shall hear all from first to last: * and thus
The conduct of my son, my own intent,
And what part you're to act, you'll know at once.
For my son, Sofia, now to manhood grown, †
Had freer scope of living: for before
How might you know, or how indeed divine address transferred the sentiment from the inferior to the superior character, which certainly adds to its delicacy.

Sforza. — I have ever found you true and thankful,
Which makes me love the building I have rais'd,
In your advancement; and repent no grace,
I have conferr'd upon you: And, believe me,
Tho' now I should repeat my favours to you,
It is not to upbraid you; but to tell you,
I find you're worthy of them, in your love
And service to me.

* You shall hear all, &c.] “Terence stands alone in every thing, but especially in his narrations. It is a pure and transparent stream which flows always evenly, and takes neither swiftness nor noise but that which it derives from its course and the ground it runs over. No wit, no display of sentiment, not a sentence that wears an epigrammatical air, none of those definitions always out of place, except in Nicole or Rochefoucauld. When he generalizes a maxim, it is in so simple and popular a manner, you would believe it to be a common proverb which he has quoted: Nothing but what belongs to the subject. I have read this poet over and over with attention; there are in him no superfluous scenes, nor any thing superfluous in the scenes.” DIDEROT.

This being the first narration in our author, and exceedingly beautiful, I could not help transcribing the foregoing passage from the French Treatise above-mentioned. The narrations in the Greek Tragedies have been long and justly admired; and from this and many other parts of Terence, taken from Greek authors, we may fairly conclude that their Comedies were equally excellent in that particular.

† Now to manhood grown.] Postquam excessit ex Ephebis. The Ephebia was the first stage of youth, and youth the last stage of boyhood. DONATUS.

His disposition, good or ill, while youth,
Fear, and a master, all constrain'd him?

Sofia. True.

Simo. Though most, as is the bent of youth, apply
Their mind to some one object, horses, hounds,
Or to the study of philosophy; *
Yet none of these, beyond the rest, did he Pursue; and yet, in moderation, all.
I was o'erjoy'd.

Sofia. And not without good cause.
For this I hold to be the Golden Rule
Of Life, Too much of one Thing's good for nothing. †

Simo. So did he shape his life to bear himself
With ease and frank good-humour unto all;
Mixt in what company foe'er, to them
He wholly did resign himself; and join'd
In their pursuits, opposing nobody,

* Or to the study of philosophy.] It was at that age that the Greeks applied themselves to the study of philosophy, and chose out some particular sect, to which they attached themselves. Plato's Dialogues give us sufficient light into that custom. DACIER.

† Too much of one thing's good for nothing.] Ne quid nimis. A sentiment not unbecoming a servant, because it is common, and is therefore not put into the mouth of the master. DONATUS.

Though the Commentators are full of admiration of this golden saying, "Do nothing to excess," yet it is plain that Terence introduces it here as a characteristick sentiment. Sofia is a dealer in old sayings. The very next time he opens his mouth, he utters another. I thought it necessary therefore, for the sake of the preservation of character, to translate this antient proverb by one of our own, though the modern maxim is not express'd with equal elegance.

Nor e'er assuming to himself: and thus
With ease, and free from envy, may you gain
Praise, and conciliate friends.

Sofia. He rul'd his life
By prudent maxims: for, as times go now,
Compliance raises friends, and truth breeds hate.

Simo. Meanwhile, 'tis now about three years ago,*
A certain woman from the isle of Andros,
Came o'er to settle in this neighbourhood,
By poverty and cruel kindred driv'n:
Handsome and young.

Sofia. Ah! I begin to fear
Some mischief from this Andrian.

Simo. At first
Modest and thriftily, tho' poor, she liv'd,†

* 'Tis now about three Years ago.] The mention of this distance of time is certainly artful, as it affords time for all the events, previous to the opening of the piece, to have happened with the strictest probability. The comment of Donatus on this passage is curious.

The author hath artfully said three years, when he might have given a longer or a shorter period. Since it is probable that the woman might have lived modestly one year; set up the trade, the next; and died, the third. In the first year, therefore, Pamphilus knew nothing of the family of Chrysis; in the second, he became acquainted with Glyce-rium; and in the third, Glycerium marries Pamphilus, and finds her parents. DONATUS.

† Modest and thriftily, &c.] It is absolutely necessary that the reputation of Glycerium should be supposed to be spotless and unblemished: and as she could never be made an honest woman, if it were not clear that she was so before marriage, Chrysis, with whom she lived, is partly to be defended, partly to be praised; whom although it is necessary to confess to be a courtesan, yet her behaviour is rendered as excusable as such a circumstance will admit. DONATUS.

With her own hands a homely livelihood
 Scarce earning from the distaff and the loom.
 But when a lover came, with promis'd gold,
 Another, and another, as the mind
 Falls easily from labour to delight,
 She took their offers, and sat up the trade.
 They, who were then her chief gallants, by chance
 Drew thither, as oft happens with young men,
 My son to join their company. So, so!
 Said I within myself, he's smit! he has it! *
 And in the morning as I saw their servants
 Run to and fro, I'd often call, Here, Boy!
 Prithee now, who had Chrysis yesterday?
 The name of this same Andrian.

Sofia. I take you.

Simo. Phædrus they said, Clinia, or Niceratus,
 For all these three then follow'd her.—Well, well,
 But what of Pamphilus? —Of Pamphilus!
 He sapt, and paid his reck'ning.—I was glad.
 Another day I made the like enquiry,
 But still found nothing touching Pamphilus.
 Thus I believ'd his virtue prov'd, and hence

* He's smit! he has it. Captus est, habet. Terms taken from the Gladiators. DACIER.

Thought him a miracle of continence:
 For he who struggles with such spirits, yet
 Holds in that commerce an unshaken mind,
 May well be trusted with the governance
 Of his own conduct. Nor was I alone
 Delighted with his life,* but all the world
 With one accord said all good things, and prais'd
 My happy fortunes, who possess a son
 So good, so lib'rally dispos'd. — In short
 Chremes, seduc'd by this fine character,
 Came of his own accord, to offer me
 His only daughter with a handsome portion
 In marriage with my son. I lik'd the match;
 Betroth'd my son; and this was pitch'd upon,
 By joint agreement, for the Wedding-Day.

Sofia. And what prevents it's being so?

Simo. I'll tell you.

In a few days, the treaty still on foot,
 This neighbour Chrysis dies.

Sofia. In happy hour:

Happy for you! I was afraid of Chrysis.

* But all the world, &c.] There is a beautiful sentiment uttered by Manoa in the Samson Agonistes of Milton, which seems to be partly borrowed from this passage in our author.

— — — — — I gain'd a son,
 And such a son, as all men hail'd me happy;
 Who would be now a Father in my stead!

Simo.

Simo. My son, on this event, was often there
 With those who were the late gallants of Chrysis;
 Assisted to prepare the funeral,
 Ever condol'd, and sometimes wept with them.
 This pleas'd me then; for in myself I thought,
 * Since merely for a small acquaintance-sake
 He takes this woman's death so nearly, what
 If he himself had lov'd? What wou'd he feel
 For me, his father? All these things, I thought,
 Were but the tokens and the offices
 Of a humane and tender disposition.
 In short, on his account, e'en I myself †
 Attend the funeral, suspecting yet
 No harm.

Sofia. And what —

Simo. You shall hear all. The Corpse
 Born forth, we follow: when among the women,

* Since merely, &c.] 'Tis strange, the Critics have never discovered a similar sentiment to this in Shakespeare. When Valentine in Twelfth-Night reports the unconquerable grief of Olivia for the loss of a brother, the Duke observes upon it,

Oh, she that hath a heart of that fine frame
 To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
 How will She love, when the rich golden shaft,
 Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
 That live in her?

Common sense directs us, for the most part, to regard Resemblances in great writers, not as the pilferings, or frugal acquisitions of needy art, but as the honest fruits of Genius, the free and liberal bounties of unenvying Nature.

HURD's Discourse on Poetical Imitation.

† I myself, &c.] A complaisant father, to go to the funeral of a courtesan, merely to oblige his son. COOKE.

Attending

Attending there, I chanc'd to cast my eyes
Upon one girl, in form—

Sofia. Not bad, perhaps.—

Simo. And look; so modest, and so beauteous, Sofia!
That nothing cou'd exceed it. As she seem'd
To grieve beyond the rest; and as her air
Appear'd more liberal and ingenuous,
I went, and ask'd her women, who she was.
Sister, they said, to Chrysis: when at once
It struck my mind; So! so! the secret's out;
Hence were those tears, and hence all that compassion!

Sofia. Alas! I fear how this affair will end!

Simo. Meanwhile the funeral proceeds: we follow;
Come to the sepulchre: the Body's plac'd
Upon the pile, lamented: Whereupon
This Sister, I was speaking of, all wild,
Ran to the flames with peril of her life.
Then! there! the frighted Pamphilus betrays
His well-diffembled and long-hidden love:
Runs up, and takes her round the waist, and cries,
Oh my Glycerium! what is it you do?
Why, why endeavour to destroy yourself?
Then she, in such a manner, that you thence Might easily perceive their long, long, love,

Threw

Threw herself back into his arms, and wept,
Oh how familiarly!

Sofia. How say you!

Simo. I

Return in anger thence, and hurt at heart,
Yet had not cause sufficient for reproof.
What have I done? he'd say: or how deserv'd
Reproach? or how offended? Father! — Her,
Who meant to cast herself into the flames,
I stopt. A fair excuse!

Sofia. You're in the right: *
For him, who sav'd a life, if you reprove,
What will you do to him that offers wrong?

Simo. Chremes next day came open-mouth'd to me:
Oh monstrous! he had found that Pamphilus
Was married to this Stranger-Woman. † I Deny the fact most steadily, and he
As steadily insists. In short we part
On such bad terms, as let me understand
He wou'd refuse his daughter.

* You're in the right.] Nothing can mark the flat simplicity of Sofia's character stronger than the insipidity of this speech.

† Was married to this Stranger-Woman.] The Greeks and Romans made use of this expression to signify a Courtesan; and I believe they borrowed that term from the people of the east; as we find it used in that sense in the books of the Old Testament. DACIER.

Donatus seems to think the word used here merely as a contemptuous expression.

Sofia.

Sofia. Did not you
Then take your son to task?

Simo. Not even this Appear'd sufficient for reproof.

Sofia. How so?

Simo. Father, (he might have said) You have, you know,
Prescrib'd a term to all these things yourself.
The time is near at hand, when I must live
According to the humour of another.
Meanwhile, permit me now to please my own!

Sofia. What cause remains to chide him then?

Simo. If he Refuses, on account of this amour,
To take a wife, such obstinate denial
Must be considered as his first offence.
Wherefore I now, from this mock-nuptial,
Endeavour to draw real cause to chide:
And that same rascal Davus, if he's plotting,
That he may let his counsel run to waste,
Now, when his knaveries can do no harm:
Who, I believe, with all his might and main
Will strive to cross my purposes; and that
More to plague me, than to oblige my son.

Sofia. Why so!

D

Simo.

Simo. Why so! Bad mind, bad heart: * But if I catch him at his tricks!—But what need words?
—If, as I wish it may, it shou'd appear
That Pamphilus objects not to the match,
Chremes remains to be prevail'd upon,
And will, I hope, consent. 'Tis now your place
To counterfeit these nuptials cunningly;
To frighten Davus; and observe my son,
What he's about, what plots they hatch together.

Sofia. Enough; I'll take due care. Let's now go in!

Simo. Go first; I'll follow you. [Exit Sofia. †

* Bad mind, bad heart.] Malâ mens, malus animus. Animus, the heart, conceives the bad actions, and Mens, the mind, devises the means of carrying them into execution. DACIER.

† Exit Sofia.] Here we take our last leave of Sofia, who is in the language of the commentators, a Protactick Personage, that is, as Donatus explains it, one who appears only once in the beginning (the Protasis) of the piece, for the sake of unfolding the argument, and is never seen again in any part of the play. The narration being ended, says Donatus, the character of Sofia is no longer necessary. He therefore departs, and leaves Simo alone to carry on the action. With all due deference to the antients, I cannot help thinking this method, if too constantly practis'd, as I think it is in our author, rather inartificial. Narration, however beautiful, is certainly the deadeſt part of theatrical compositions; it is indeed, ſtrictly ſpeaking, ſcarce Dramatick, and ſtrikes the leaſt in the representation: and the too frequent introduction of a character, to whom a principal perſon in the Fable is to relate in confidence the circumſtances previous to the opening of the play, is ſurely too direct a manner of conveying that information to the audience. Every thing of this nature ſhould come obliquely, fall in a manner by accident, or be drawn, as it were, perforce, from the parties concerned, in the courſe of the action: a practice, which if reckon'd highly beautiful in Epick, may be almoſt ſet down as abſolutely neceſſary in Dramatick Poetry. It is, however, more adviſeable even to ſeem tedious, than to hazard being obſcure. Terence certainly opens his plays with great addreſs, and assigns a probable reaſon for one of the parties being ſo communicative to the other; and yet it is too plain that this narration is made merely for the ſake of the audience, ſince there never was a duller hearer than Maſter Sofia, and it never appears in the ſequel of the Play, that Simo's inſtructions to him are of the leaſt uſe to frighten Davus, or work upon Pamphilus. Yet even this Protactick Perſonage is one of the inſtances of Terence's art, ſince it was often uſual in the Roman Comedy, as may be ſeen even in Plautus, to make the relation

Beyond all doubt
 My son's averse to take a wife: I saw
 How frighten'd Davus was, but even now,
 When he was told a nuptial was preparing.
 But here he comes.

S C E N E II.

Enter DAVUS. *

Davus to himself.] I thought 'twere wonderful
 If this affair went off so easily;
 And dreaded where my master's great good-humour
 Wou'd end at last: Who, after he perceiv'd
 The Lady was refus'd, ne'er said a word
 To any of us, nor e'er took it ill.

Simo, behind.] But now he will; to your cost too, I warrant you!

Davus. This was his scheme; to lead us by the nose relation of the argument the express office of the Prologue.

Sir Richard Steele has opened the Conscious Lovers in direct imitation of the Andrian, but has unfolded the argument with much less art, as will perhaps appear in the course of the notes on this act. In this place it is sufficient to observe, that the delineation of the characters in the English author is infinitely inferior to that of those in the Roman. Simo is the most finished character in the play.

Sir John Bevil, I fear, is but an insignificant personage. Humphry, while he has all the plainness and dullness of Sofia, possesses neither his fidelity nor secrecy; for he goes between the father and the son, and in some measure betrays both.

* Davus.] Sir Richard Steele has modernized the characters of Davus and Myfis with great elegance and humour in his sprightly Footman and Chambermaid, Tom and Phillis.

In a false dream of joy; then all agape
With hope, even then that we were most secure,
To have o'erwhelm'd us, nor have giv'n us time
To cast about which way to break the match.
Cunning old Gentleman!

Simo. What says the Rogue?

Davus. My master, and I did not see him!

Simo. Davus!

Davus. Well! what now? [pretending not to see him.

Simo. Here! this way!

Davus. What can he want? [to himself.

Simo, overhearing.] What say you?

Davus. Upon what? Sir!

Simo. Upon what!

The world reports that my son keeps a mistress.

Davus. Oh, to be sure, the world cares much for that.

Simo. D'ye mind what I say? Sirrah!

Davus. Nothing more, Sir.

Simo. But for me now to dive into these matters
May seem perhaps like too severe a father:
For all his youthful pranks concern not me.
While 'twas in season, he had my free leave
To take his swing of pleasure. But to-day
Brings on another stage of life, and asks

For other manners: wherefore I desire,
Or, if you please, I do beseech you, Davus,
To set him right again.

Davus. What means all this?

Simo. All, who are fond of mistresses, dislike
The thoughts of matrimony.

Davus. So they say.

Simo. And then, if such a person entertains
An evil counsellor in those affairs,
He tampers with the mind, and makes bad worse.

Davus. Troth, I don't comprehend one word of this.

Simo. No?

Davus. No. I'm Davus, and not Oedipus.

Simo. Then for the rest I have to say to you,
You chuse I should speak plainly.

Davus. By all means.

Simo. If I discover then, that in this match
You get to your dog's tricks to break it off,
Or try to shew how shrewd a rogue you are,
I'll have you beat to mummy, and then thrown

* In prison, Sirrah! upon this condition,
That when I take you out again, I swear

* In Prison.] Te in pistrinum, Dave, dedam. The prison mentioned here, and in many other passages of our author, was a kind of House of Correction for slaves, to which they were sent to grind corn, as disorderly persons are made to beat hemp in our Bridewell.

To grind there in your stead. D'ye take me now?
Or don't you understand this neither?

Davus. Clearly.

You have spoke out at last: the very thing!
Quite plain and home; and nothing round about.

Simo. I could excuse your tricks in any thing,
Rather than this.

Davus. Good words! I beg of you.

Simo. You laugh at me: well, well!—I give you warning,
That you do nothing rashly, nor pretend
You was not advertis'd of this—Take heed! [Exit.

S C E N E III.

D A V U S.

* Troth, Davus, 'tis high time to look about you;
No room for sloth, as far as I can found
The sentiments of our old gentleman
About this marriage; which if not fought off,

* Troth, Davus, &c.] This, says Donatus, is a short and comick deliberation, calculated to excite the attention of the audience to the impending events; artfully relating part of the argument, but in order to prepare the events without anticipating them, representing the circumstances of the story as fabulous; and in order to enliven it, passing from dry narration to mimickry.

How much more artful is the conduct of Terence in this place than that of Sir Richard Steele in the Conscious Lovers, who besides the long narration, with which the play opens, has obliged the patient Humphrey to hear a second story, with which he has burthened the conclusion of his first act, from young Bevil.

And

And cunningly, spoils me, or my poor master.
 I know not what to do; nor can resolve
 To help the son, or to obey the father.
 If I desert poor Pamphilus, alas!
 I tremble for his life; if I assist him,
 I dread his father's threats: a shrewd old Cuff,
 Not easily deceiv'd. For first of all,
 He knows of this amour; and watches me
 With jealous eyes, lest I devise some trick
 To break the match. If he discovers it,
 Woe to poor Davus! nay, if he's inclin'd
 To punish me, he'll seize on some pretence
 To throw me into prison, right or wrong.
 Another mischief is, this Andrian,
 Mistress or wife, 's with child by Pamphilus.
 And do but mark their confidence! 'tis sure
 * The doatage of mad people, not of lovers.
 Whate'er she shall bring forth, they have resolv'd
 † To educate: and have among themselves
 Devis'd the strangest story! that Glycerium

* The doatage, &c.] Inceptio est amentium, haud amantium. A play upon words, impossible to be exactly preserved in the translation.

† To educate.] Decreverunt tollere. The word tollere strictly signifies to take up, and alludes to the custom of those times. As soon as a child was born, it was laid on the ground; and if the father was willing to educate it, he ordered it to be taken up: but if he said nothing, it was a token signifying that he would have it exposed. DACIER.

Is an Athenian citizen. “ There was “ Once on a time a certain merchant, shipwreckt
 “ Upon the isle of Andros; there he died:
 “ And Chryfis’ father took this Orphan-wreck,
 “ Then but an infant, under his protection.”
 Ridiculous! ’tis all romance to me;
 And yet the story pleases them. And see!
 Myfis comes forth. But I must to the Forum*
 To look for Pamphilus, for fear his father
 Should find him first, and take him unawares. [Exit.

S C E N E I V.

Enter MYSIS. [Speaking to a servant within.

I hear, Archillis; I hear what you say:
 You beg me to bring Lefbia. By my troth
 That Lefbia is a drunken wretch, hot-headed,
 Nor worthy to be trusted with a woman
 In her first labour.—Well, well! she shall come.
 —Observe how earnest the old Gossip is, [Coming forward.
 Because this Lefbia is her pot-companion.

* The Forum.] The Forum is very frequently spoken of in the Comick authors; and from various passages in which Terence mentions it, it may be collected, that it was a publick place, serving the several purposes of a market, the seat of the Courts of Justice, a publick walk, and an Exchange.

—Oh grant my mistress, Heav'n, a safe delivery,
 And let the midwife trespass any where
 Rather than here!—But what is it I see?
 Pamphilus all disorder'd: How I fear
 The cause! I'll wait awhile, that I may know
 If this commotion means us any ill,

S C E N E V.

* PAMPHILUS, MY SIS behind.

Pam. Is this well done? or like a man?—Is this
 The action of a father?

Myfis. What's the matter?

Pam. Oh all ye Pow'rs of heav'n and earth, what's wrong
 If this is not so?—If he was determin'd
 That I to-day should marry, should I not Have had some previous notice?—ought not He
 To have inform'd me of it long ago?

Myfis. Alas! what's this I hear?

Pam. And Chremes too,
 Who had refus'd to trust me with his daughter,

* Pamphilus. The two most beautiful characters in this play, in my opinion, are the Father and Son. It has already been observed how much Sir Richard Steele falls short of Terence in delineating the first; and I must own, though Bevil is plainly the most laboured character in the Conscious Lovers, I think it inferior to Pamphilus. The particular differences in their character I propose to point out in the course of these notes: at present I shall only observe in general, that, of the two, Bevil is the more cool and refined, Pamphilus the more natural and pathetick.

Changes his mind, because I change not mine.*
 Can he then be so obstinately bent
 To tear me from Glycerium? To lose her
 Is losing life.—Was ever man so croft,
 So curst as I?—Oh Pow'rs of heav'n and earth!
 Can I by no means fly from this alliance
 With Chremes' family?—so oft contemn'd
 And held in scorn!—all done, concluded all!—
 Rejected, then recall'd:—and why?—unless,
 For so I must suspect, † they breed some monster;
 Whom as they can obtrude on no one else,
 They bring to me.

Myfis. Alas, alas! this speech

* Changes his mind, &c.] Id mutavit, quia me immutatum videt. The verb immutare in other Latin authors, and even in other parts of Terence himself, signifies to change: as in the Phormio, Antipho says Non possum immutari. “I cannot be changed.” But here the sense absolutely requires that immutatum should be rendered NOT changed. Madam Dacier endeavours to reconcile this, according to a conjecture of her father's, by shewing that immutatus stands for immutabilis; as immutus for immobilis, invictus for invincibilis, &c. But these examples do not remove the difficulty; since those participles always bear a negative sense, which immutatus does not: and thence arises all the difficulty. Terence certainly uses the verb immutare both negatively and positively, as is plain from this passage and the above passage from the Phormio: and I dare say with strict propriety. In our own language we have instances of the same word bearing two senses directly opposite to each other. The word Let for instance is used in the contradictory meanings of permission and prohibition. The modern acceptation of the word is indeed almost entirely confined to the first sense; though we say even at this day without LET or molestation. Shakespeare in Hamlet, says, that is, stops, prevents, hinders me, which is directly opposite to the modern use of the word.

I'll make a Ghost of him that lets me.

† They breed some monster.] Aliquid monstrum. Dacier and some others imagine these words to signify some plot that is hatching. Donatus and the commentators on him interpret them as referring to the woman, which is the sense I have followed; and I think the next sentence confirms this interpretation.

Has struck me almost dead with fear.

Pam. And then

My father!—what to say of him?—Oh shame!

A thing of so much consequence to treat

So negligently!—For but even now

Passing me in the Forum, Pamphilus!

To-day's your wedding-day, said He: Prepare;

Go, get you home!—This sounded in my ears

As if he said, Go, hang yourself!—I stood

Confounded. Think you I could speak one word?

Or offer an excuse, how weak for'er?

No, I was dumb:—and had I been aware,

Should any ask what I'd have done, I would,

Rather than this, do any thing.—But now

What to resolve upon?—So many cares

Entangle me at once, and rend my mind,

Pulling it different ways. My love, compassion,

This urgent match, my reverence for my father,

Who yet has ever been so gentle to me,

And held so slack a rein upon my pleasures.

—And I oppose him?—Racking thought!—Ah me!

I know not what to do.

Myfis. Alas, I fear

Where this uncertainty will end. 'Twere best

He should confer with her; or I at least Speak touching her to him. For while the mind *
 Hangs in suspense, a trifle turns the scale.

Pam. Who's there? what, Myfis! Save you!

Myfis. Save you! Sir. [Coming forwards.

Pam. How does she?

Myfis. How! oppress'd with wretchedness. †
 To-day supremely wretched, as to-day
 Was formerly appointed for your wedding.
 And then she fears lest you desert her.

Pam. I!

Desert her? Can I think on't? or deceive
 A wretched maid, who trusted to my care
 Her life and honour! Her, whom I have held
 Near to my heart, and cherish'd as my wife?
 Or leave her modest and well-nurtur'd mind

* For while the mind, &c.] Dum in dubio est animus, paulo momento huc illuc impellitur. Dacier thinks that these words allude to scales, which sense I have adopted in the translation; but I rather think with Donatus that they refer to any great weight, which while it is yet unfixt, and hangs in suspense, is driven by the slightest touch here or there. In the beautiful story of Myrrha in Ovid's Metamorphoses, there is a passage, which the Commentators with great justice suppose to be an imitation of this sentence.

— — — — — Utque securi,
 Saucia trabs ingens, ubi plaga novissima restat,

Quo cadat, in dubio est, omniq; à parte timetur; Sic animus vario labefactus vulnere nutat Huc levis atq; illuc, momentaq; fumit utroque.

† Oppress'd with wretchedness.] Laborat e dolore. Though the word laborat has tempted Donatus and the rest of the Commentators to suppose that this sentence signified Glycerium's being in labour, I cannot help concurring with Cooke, that it means simply, that she is weighed down with grief. The words immediately subsequent corroborate this interpretation: and at the conclusion of the scene, when Myfis tells him, she is going for a midwife, Pamphilus

Through want to be corrupted? Never, never.

Myfis. No doubt, did it depend on you alone;
But if constrain'd —

Pam. D'ye think me then so vile?
Or so ungrateful, so inhuman, savage,
Neither long intercourse, nor love, nor shame,
Can make me keep my faith?

Myfis. I only know
That she deserves you should remember her.

Pam. I should remember her? Oh, Myfis, Myfis!
The words of Chrysis touching my Glycerium
Are written in my heart. On her death-bed
She call'd me. I approach'd her. You retir'd.
We were alone; and Chrysis thus began.
My Pamphilus, you see the youth and beauty
Of this unhappy maid: and well you know,
These are but feeble guardians to preserve
Her fortune or her fame. By this right hand
I do beseech you, by your better angel,*
By your tried faith, by her forlorn condition,

Pamphilus hurries her away as he would naturally have done here, had he understood by these words, that her mistress was in labour.

* By your better angel.] Per Genium tuum. Most editors give Ingenium: but as Bentley observes, this [per Genium] was the most usual way of adjuring; and there is a passage in Horace, plainly imitated from this in our author, where the measure infallibly determines the reading.

Quod te per Genium, dextramq; Deosq; Penates, Obsecro, et obtestor.

Hor. L. I. Ep. 7. COOKE.

I do

I do conjure you, put her not away,
 Nor leave her to distress. If I have ever,
 As my own brother, lov'd you; or if she
 Has ever held you dear 'bove all the world,
 And ever shewn obedience to your will—
 I do bequeath you to her as a husband,
 Friend, Guardian, Father: All our little wealth
 To you I leave, and trust it to your care.—
 She join'd our hands, and died.—I did receive her,
 And once receiv'd will keep her.*

Myfis. So we trust.

Pam. What make you from her?

Myfis. Going for a midwife.†

Pam. Haste then! and hark, before take special heed,
 You mention not a word about the marriage,
 Left this too give her pain.

Myfis. I understand.‡

* How much more affecting is this speech, than Bevil's dry detail to Humphry of his meeting with Indiana! a detail the more needless and inartificial, as it might with much more propriety and pathos have been entirely reserved for Indiana herself in the scene with her father.

† Going for a midwife.] Methinks Myfis has loitered a little too much, considering her errand; but perhaps Terence knew, that some women would gossip on the way, though on an affair of life and death. COOKE.

This two-edged reflection glancing at once on

Terence and the ladies is, I think, very ill-founded. The delay of Myfis, on seeing the emotion of Pamphilus, is very natural; and her artful endeavours to interest his passions in favour of her mistress, are rather marks of her attention, than neglect.

‡ The first act of Baron's Andrian is little else than a mere version of this first act of Terence. Its extreme elegance and great superiority to the Prose Translation of Dacier, is a strong proof of the superior excellence and propriety of a Poetical Translation of the works of this author.

ACT II. SCENE I.

* CHARINUS, BYRRHIA.

Char. HOW, Byrrhia? Is she to be married, say you,
To Pamphilus to-day?

Byr. 'Tis even so.

Char. How do you know?

Byr. I had it even now
From Davus at the Forum.

Char. Woe is me!

Then I'm a wretch indeed: till now my mind

* Charinus, Byrrhia.] These two characters were not in the works of Menander, but were added to the Fable by Terence, left Philumena's being left without a husband, on the marriage of Pamphilus to Glycerium, should appear too tragical a circumstance. DONATUS.

Madam Dacier, after transcribing this remark, adds, that it appears to her to be an observation of great importance to the Theatre, and well worthy our attention.

Important as this Dramatick Arcanum may be, it were to be wished that Terence had never found it out, or at least that he had not availed himself of it in the construction of the Andrian. It is plain that the Duplicity of Intrigue did not proceed from the imitation of Menander, since these characters, on which the double plot is founded, were not drawn from the Greek Poet. Charinus and Byrrhia are indeed but poor counterparts, or faint shadows of Pamphilus and Davus; and instead of adding life and vigour to the Fable, rather damp its spirit, and stop the activity of its progress. As to the tragical circumstance of Philumena's having no husband, it seems something like the distress of Prince Prettyman, who thinks it a matter of indifference, whether he shall appear to be the son of a King or a Fisherman, and is only uneasy lest he should be the son of nobody at all. I am much more inclined to the opinion of an ingenious French Critick, whom I have already cited more than once, than to that of Donatus or Madam Dacier. His comment on this under-plot is as follows.

" It is almost impossible to conduct two intrigues at a time, without weakening the interest of both. With what address has Terence interwoven the Amours of Pamphilus and Charinus in the Andrian! But has he done it without inconvenience? At the beginning of the second Act, do we not seem to be entering upon a new piece? and does
" the

Floated 'twixt hope and fear: now, hope remov'd,
Stunn'd, and o'erwhelm'd, it sinks beneath its cares.

Byr. Nay, prithee Master, since the thing you wish
Cannot be had, e'en wish for that which may!

Char. I wish for nothing but Philumena.

Byr. Ah, how much wiser were it, that you strove
To quench this passion, than, with words like these,
To fan the fire, and blow it to a flame?

Char. How readily do men at ease prescribe
To those who're sick at heart! Distrest like me,
You would not talk thus.

Byr. Well, well, as you please.

Char. Ha! I see Pamphilus. I can resolve
On any thing, e'er give up all for lost.

Byr. What now?

Char. I will intreat him, beg, beseech him,
Tell him our course of love, and thus perhaps,
At least prevail upon him to defer
His marriage some few days: meanwhile, I hope,
Something may happen.

“ the fifth conclude in a very interesting manner?” DIDEROT.

It is but justice to Sir Richard Steele to confess, that he has conducted the under-plot in the Conscious Lovers in a much more artful and interesting manner than Terence in the play before us. The part which Myrtle sustains (though not wholly unexceptionable, especially in the last act) is more essential to the Fable, than Charinus in the Andrian. His character also is more separated and distinguished from Bevil than Charinus from Pamphilus, and serves to produce one of the best scenes in the play.

Byr.

Byr. Ay, that something's nothing.

Char. Byrrhia, what think you? Shall I speak to him?

Byr. Why not? for tho' you don't obtain your Suit,
He will at least imagine you're prepar'd
To cuckold him, in case he marries her.

Char. Away, you hang-dog, with your base suspicions!

S C E N E II.

Enter PAMPHILUS.

Pam. Charinus, save you!

Char. Save you, Pamphilus!
Imploring comfort, safety, help, and counsel,
You see me now before you.

Pam. I do lack
Myself both help and counsel—But what mean you?

Char. Is this your Wedding-day?

Pam. Ay, so they say.

Char. Ah, Pamphilus, if so, this day
You see the last of me.

Pam. How so?

Char. Ah me!

I dare not speak it: prithee tell him, Byrrhia.

Byr. Ay, that I will.

Pam. What is't?

Byr. He is in Love.
With your Bride, Sir*.

Pam. I 'faith so am not I.
Tell me, Charinus, has ought further past
'Twixt you and her?

Char. Ah, no, no.

Pam. Wou'd there had!

Char. Now by our friendship, by my love, I beg
You wou'd not marry her.——

Pam. I will endeavour.

Char. If that's impossible, or if this match
Be grateful to your heart——

Pam. My heart!

Char. At least
Defer it some few days; while I depart
That I may not behold it.

Pam. Hear, Charinus;
It is, I think, scarce honesty in him
To look for thanks, who means no favour. I
Abhor this marriage, more than you desire it.

Char. You have reviv'd me.

* With your Bride.] Sponsam hic tuam amat.
We have no word exactly answering the sense of Sponsam in this place. The familiar French expression of La Future comes pretty near it.

It is, however, I hope, an allowable liberty in familiar conversation to speak of the Lady by the name of the Bride on her wedding-day, though before the performance of the ceremony.

Pam. Now if you, or He,
Your Byrrhia here, can do or think of aught;
Act, plot, devise, invent, strive all you can
To make her your's; and I'll do all I can
That She may not be mine.

Char. Enough.

Pam. I fee
Davus, and in good time: for He'll advise
What's best to do.

Char. But you, you forry Rogue, [to Byrrhia.
Can give me no advice, nor tell me aught,
But what it is impertinent to know.
Hence, Sirrah, get you gone!

Byr. With all my heart. [Exit.

S C E N E III.

Enter DAVUS hastily.

Davus. Good Heav'ns, what news I bring! what joyful news!
But where shall I find Pamphilus, to drive
His fears away, and make him full of Joy?

Char. There's something pleases him.

Pam. No matter what.

He has not heard of our ill fortune yet.

Davus. And He, I warrant, if he has been told
Of his intended Wedding——

Char. Do you hear?

Davus. Poor Soul, is running all about the Town
In quest of me. But whither shall I go?
Or which way run?

Char. Why don't you speak to him?

Davus. I'll go.

Pam. Ho! Davus! Stop, come here!

Davus. Who calls?

O, Pamphilus! the very man.—Heyday!
Charinus too!—Both gentlemen, well met!
I've news for both.

Pam. I'm ruin'd, Davus.

Davus. Hear me!

Pam. Undone!

Davus. I know your fears.

Char. My life's at stake.

Davus. Your's I know also.

Pam. Matrimony mine.

Davus. I know it.

Pam. But to-day.

Davus.

Davus. You ftun me; Plague!

I tell you I know ev'ry thing: You fear [to Charinus.

You shou'd not marry her.—You fear you shou'd. [to Pam.

Char. The very thing.

Pam. The same.

Davus. And yet that same

Is nothing. Mark!

Pam. Nay, rid me of my fear.

Davus. I will then. Chremes

Won't give his daughter to you.

Pam. How d'ye know?

Davus. I'm fure of it. Your Father but juft now Takes me afide, and tells me 'twas his will,

That you shou'd wed to-day; with much befide,

Which now I have not leifure to repeat.

I, on the infant, haftening to find you,

Run to the Forum to inform you of it:

There, failing, climb an eminence, look round:

No Pamphilus: I light by chance on Byrrhia;

* Enquire; he hadn't feen you. Vext at heart,

What's to be done; thought I. Returning thence

* Enquire; he had'nt feen you.] Rogo, negat vidiffe. Wonderful brevity, and worthy imitation. DONATUS.

Whoever remembers this Speech, as well as many other little narrations, in the original, will readily concur with the Critick; but whether the imitation recommended is very practicable, or capable of equal elegance in our language, the reader may partly determine from the present and other translations.

A doubt arose within me. Ha! bad cheer,
The old man melancholy, and a wedding
Clapt up so suddenly! This don't agree.

Pam. Well, what then?

Davus. I betook me instantly
To Chremes' house; but thither when I came,
* Before the door all hush. This tickled me.

Pam. You're in the right. Proceed.

Davus. I watch'd awhile:
Mean time no foul went in, no foul came out;
† No Matron; in the house no ornament;
No note of preparation. I approach'd,
Look'd in ——

Pam. I understand: a potent sign!

Davus. Does this seem like a nuptial?

Pam. I think not,

Davus.

Davus. Think not, d'ye say? you don't conceive:
The thing is evident. I met beside,
As I departed thence, with Chremes' boy,

* Before the door all hush.] Terence has not put this remark into the mouth of Davus without foundation. The House of the Bride was always full, and before the Street-door were Musicians, and those who waited to accompany the Bride. DACIER.

† No matron.] Married women, neighbours, and relations; whose business it was to attend the Lady, whose name (Pronuba) as well as office was much the same as that of the modern Bride-maid.

Bearing some potherbs, and a pennyworth *
Of little fishes for the old man's dinner.

Char. I am deliver'd, Davus, by your means,
From all my apprehensions of to-day.

Davus. And yet you are undone.

Char. How so? since Chremes
Will not consent to give Philumena
To Pamphilus.

Davus. Ridiculous! As if,
Because the daughter is denied to him,
She must of course wed you. Look to it well;
Court the old Gentleman thro' friends, apply,
Or else ——

Char. You're right: I will about it straight,
Altho' that hope has often fail'd. Farewell. [Exit.]

S C E N E I V.

Pam. What means my Father then? why counterfeit?

Davus. That I'll explain. If he were angry now,
Merely that Chremes has refus'd his Daughter,
He'd think himself in fault; and justly too,

* A pennyworth.] Obolo. The Obolus, says Donatus, was a coin of the lowest value.

Cooke tells us that the precise worth of it was one penny, farthing, one sixth.

Before the bias of your mind is known.
 But granting you refuse her for a Wife,
 Then all the blame devolves on you, and then
 Comes all the storm.

Pam. What course then shall I take?
 Shall I submit——

Davus. He is your Father, Sir,
 Whom to oppose were difficult; and then
 Glycerium's a lone woman; and he'll find
 Some course, no matter what, to drive her hence.

Pam. To drive her hence?

Davus. Directly.

Pam. Tell me then,
 Oh tell me, Davus, what were best to do?

Davus. Say that you'll marry*.

Pam. How!

Davus. And where's the harm?

Pam. Say that I'll marry!

* Say, that you'll marry.] The reciprocal dissimulation between the Father and Son, in the Fable of this Comedy, is much better managed by our Author than by Sir Richard Steele. The efforts made by each party, in order to accomplish the favourite point, which they feverally have in view, very naturally keeps all the characters in motion, and produces many affecting, and pleasant situations. There is too much uniformity in the adventures, as well as character of Bevil, for the vivacity of the Drama. His supposed consent to marry is followed by no consequences, and his honest dissimulation, as he himself calls it, is less reconcileable to the philosophical turn of his character, than to the natural sensibility of Pamphilus; besides that the dissimulation of the latter is palliated by his being almost involuntarily driven into it by the artful instigations of Davus.

Davus.

Davus. Why not?

Pam. Never, never.

Davus. Do not refuse!

Pam. Persuade not!

Davus. Do but mark

The consequence.

Pam. Divorcement from Glycerium,
And marriage with the other.

Davus. No such thing.

Your father, I suppose, accosts you thus.

I'd have you wed to-day;—I will, quoth you:

What reason has he to reproach you then?

Thus shall you baffle all his settled schemes,

And put him to confusion; all the while

Secure yourself: for 'tis beyond a doubt

That Chremes will refuse his daughter to you;

So obstinately too, you need not pause,

Or change these measures, lest he change his mind;

Say to your father then, that you will wed,

That, with the will, he may want cause to chide.

But if, deluded by fond hopes, you cry,

“No one will wed their daughter to a rake,

“A libertine.”—Alas, you're much deceiv'd.

For know, your father will redeem some wretch

From rags and beggary to be your wife,
Rather than see your ruin with Glycerium.
But if he thinks you bear an easy mind,
He too will grow indiff'rent, and seek out
Another match at leisure: the mean while Affairs may take a lucky turn.

Pam. D'ye think so?

Davus. Beyond all doubt.

Pam. See, what you lead me to.

Davus. Nay, peace!

Pam. I'll say so then. But have a care
He knows not of the child, which I've agreed
To educate.

Davus. Oh confidence!

Pam. She drew
This promise from me, as a firm assurance
That I would not forsake her.

Davus. We'll take care.
But here's your father: let him not perceive
You're melancholy.

S C E N E V.

Enter SIMO at a distance.

Simo. I return to see

What they're about, or what they meditate.

Davus. Now is he sure that you'll refuse to wed.
From some dark corner brooding o'er black thoughts
He comes, and fancies he has fram'd a speech
To disconcert you. See, you keep your ground!

Pam. If I can, Davus.

Davus. Trust me, Pamphilus,
Your father will not change a single word
In anger with you, do but say you'll wed.

S C E N E VI.

Enter BYRRHIA behind.

Byr. To-day my master bad me leave all else
For Pamphilus, and watch how he proceeds,
About his marriage; wherefore I have now
* Follow'd the old man hither: yonder too

* Follow'd the old man hither.] HUNC venientem sequor. This verse, though in every edition, as Bentley judiciously observes, is certainly spurious: for as Pamphilus has not disappeared since Byrrhia left the stage, he could not say nunc HUNC venientem sequor. If we suppose the G 2 line

Stands Pamphilus himself, and with him Davus.
To business then!

Simo. I see them both together.

Davus. Now mind. [apart to Pam.

Simo. Here, Pamphilus!

Davus. Now turn about,
As taken unawares. [apart.

Pam. Who calls? my father!

Davus. Well said! [apart.

Simo. It is my pleasure, that to-day,
As I have told you once before, you marry.

Davus. Now on our part, I fear what he'll reply. [aside.

Pam. In that, and all the rest of your commands,
I shall be ready to obey you, Sir!

Byr. How's that! [overbearing.

Davus. Struck dumb. [aside.

Byr. What said he? [listening.

Simo. You perform

line genuine, we must at the same time suppose Terence guilty of a monstrous absurdity. COOKE.

Other Commentators have also stumbled at this passage; but if in the words follow'd HIM hither, we suppose HIM [HUNC] to refer to Simo, the whole difficulty is removed: and that the Pronoun does really signify Simo is evident from the very circumstance of Pamphilus never having left the stage since the disappearance of Byrrhia. Simo also is represented as coming on the stage homewards, so that Byrrhia might easily have followed him along the street: and it is evident that Byrrhia does not allude to Pamphilus, from the agreeable surprize which he expresses on seeing him there so opportunely for his purpose.

Your Duty, when you chearfully comply
With my desires.

Davus. There! said I not the tuth? [apart to Pam.

Byr. My master then, so far as I can find,
May whistle for a Wife.

Simo. Now then go in,
That when you're wanted you be found.

Pam. I go. [Exit.

Byr. Is there no faith in the affairs of men?
'Tis an old saying and a true one too;
"Of all Mankind each loves himself the best."
I've seen the Lady; know her beautiful;
And therefore sooner pardon Pamphilus,
If he had rather win her to his Arms,
Than yield her to th' embraces of my master.
* I will go bear these tidings, and receive
Much evil treatment for my evil news. [Exit.

* I will go bear these tidings.] Donatus observes on this Scene between Byrrhia, Simo, Pamphilus, and Davus, that the Dialogue is sustained by four persons, who have little or no intercourse with each other: so that the Scene is not only in direct contradiction to the precept of Horace excluding a fourth person, but is also otherwise vicious in its construction. Scenes of this kind are, I think, much too frequent in Terence, though indeed the form of the antient Theatre was more adapted to the representation of them than the modern. The multiplicity of speeches aside is also the chief error in his Dialogue, such speeches, though very common in Dramatick writers antient and modern, being always more or less unnatural. —Myrtle's suspicions, grounded on the intelligence drawn from Bevil's servant, are more artfully imagined by the English Poet, than those of Charinus created by employing his servant as a Spy on the actions of Pamphilus.

SCENE VII.

Manent SIMO and DAVUS.

Davus. Now he supposes I've some trick in hand,
And loiter here to practise it on him!

Simo. Well, what now, Davus?

Davus. Nothing.

Simo. Nothing, say you?

Davus. Nothing at all.

Simo. And yet I look'd for something

Davus. * So, I perceive, you did:—This nettles him. [aside.

Simo. Can you speak truth?

Davus. Most easily.

Simo. Say then,

Is not this wedding irksome to my Son,
From his adventure with the Andrian?

Davus. No faith; or if at all, 'twill only be
Two or three days' anxiety, you know:
Then 'twill be over: for he sees the thing
In its true light.

* So, I perceive, you did.—This nettles him.
[aside.] Præter spem evenit: sentio: hoc male habet virum. All the commentators and translators have understood this whole line as spoken aside: but as the first part of it is an apt answer to what Simo had said, and in the same style with the rest of the conversation, that Davus commonly holds with him, I rather think it was intended in reply; to which Davus subjoins the conclusion, as his sly remark aside.—Whether this was certainly the Poet's meaning, it is difficult to determine; but I think that this manner of speaking the line would have the best effect on the Stage.

Simo.

Simo. I praise him for't.

Davus. While you
Refrain'd him not; and while his youth allow'd,
'Tis true he lov'd; and even then by stealth,
As wife men ought, and careful of his fame.
Now his age calls for matrimony, now
To matrimony he inclines his mind.

Simo. Yet, in my eyes, he seem'd a little sad.

Davus. Not upon that account. He has, he thinks
Another reason to complain of you.

Simo. For what?

Davus. A trifle.

Simo. Well, what is't?

Davus. Nay, nothing.

Simo. Tell me, what is't?

Davus. You are then he complains,
Somewhat too sparing of expence.

Simo. I?

Davus. You.

* A feast of scarce ten Drachms! Does this, says he,
Look like a wedding-supper for his son?
What friends can I invite? especially,

* A feast of scarce ten Drachms!] The Attick Drachma was equal to seven-pence, three farthings, of English money. COOKE.

At such a time as this?—and, truly, Sir,
You have been very frugal; much too sparing.
I can't commend you for it.

Simo. Hold your peace.

Davus. I've ruffled him. [aside.

Simo. I'll look to that. Away! [Exit Davus.
What now? What means the varlet? Precious Rogue,
For if there's any Knavery on foot,
* He, I am sure, is the contriver on't. [Exit.

* The second Act of the Andrian of Baron is, like the first, very nearly an exact translation of Terence.

ACT III. SCENE I.

SIMO, DAVUS, coming out of Simo's House.—MYSIS, LESBIA, going towards the House of Glycerium.

Myfis. AY, marry, 'tis as you say, Lesbia:
Women scarce ever find a constant man.

Simo. The Andrian's maid-servant! Is't not?

Davus. Ay.

Myfis. But Pamphilus——

Simo. What says she? [overhearing.

Myfis. Has been true.

Simo. How's that? [overhearing.

Davus. Wou'd he were deaf, or she were dumb! [aside.

Myfis. For the child, Boy or Girl, he has resolv'd
To educate.

Simo. O Jupiter! what's this
I hear? If this be true, I'm lost indeed.

Lesbia. A good young Gentleman!

Myfis. Oh, very good.

But in, in, lest you make her wait.

Lesbia. I follow. [Exeunt Myfis and Lesbia.

SCENE II.

Manent SIMO, DAVUS.

Davus. Unfortunate! What remedy! [aside.

Simo. How's this? [to himself.

And can he be so mad? What! educate
A Harlot's child!—Ah, now I know their drift:
Fool that I was, scarce smelt it out at last.

Davus listening.] What's this he says he has smelt out?

Simo. Imprimis, [to himself.

'Tis this Rogue's trick upon me. All a sham:
A counterfeit deliv'ry, and mock labour,
Devis'd to frighten Chremes from the match.

Glycerium within.] * Juno Lucina, save me! help, I pray thee.

* Glycerium within.] Juno Lucina, save me! help, I pray thee!] Juno Lucina was the Goddess supposed to preside over child-birth.

“ In their Comedies, the Romans generally “ borrowed their plots from the Greek Poets;
“ and theirs was commonly a little Girl stolen
“ or wandered from her Parents, brought back
“ unknown to the city, there got with child
“ by some lewd young fellow; who, by the “ help of his servant, cheats his father: and
“ when her time comes, to cry Juno Lucina, “ fer orem! one or other sees a little Box or “ Cabinet, which was carried away with her,
“ and so discovers her to her friends; if some “ God do not prevent it, by coming down in “ a Machine, and taking the thanks of it
“ to himself.

“ By the Plot you may guess much of the “ characters of the Persons. An old father,
“ who would willingly, before he dies, see his “ Son well married; a debauched Son, kind in “ his nature to his mistress, but miserably in “ want of money; a servant or slave, who has “ so much wit as to strike in with him, and “ help to dupe his father; a Braggadochio
“ Captain; a Parasite; and a Lady of Plea“ sure.

“ As for the poor honest maid, on whom
“ the Story is built, and who ought to be one
“ the principal Actors in the Play, she is “ commonly a Mute in it: She has the breed“ ing of the old Elizabeth way, which was
“ for maids to be seen, and not to be heard;
“ and it is enough you know she is willing
to

Simo. Hey day! Already? Oh ridiculous!
Soon as she heard that I was at the Door
She hastens to cry out: Your incidents*
Are ill-tim'd, Davus.

Davus. Mine, Sir?

Simo. Are your players
Unmindful of their Cues, and want a Prompter?

Davus. I do not comprehend you.

Simo apart.] If this Knave

“ to be married when the fifth Act requires
“ it.” DRYDEN’S Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

It must be remembered that Dryden’s Essay is written in the form of a Dialogue, and therefore the above Extract is not to be supposed to be absolutely the very opinion of the writer, but receives a good deal of its high colouring from the character of the Speaker. It is true, indeed, that this crying out of a woman in labour behind the Scenes, which Donatus gravely remarks is the only way in which the Severity of the Comædiæ Palliata would allow a young gentlewoman to be introduced, is perhaps the most exceptionable circumstance of all the antient Drama: and if the modern Theatre has any transcendent advantage over the antient, it is in the frequent and successful introduction of female personages.

The antients were so little sensible of the impropriety or indecorum of such an incident, that it is (as Dryden has observed) introduced into many of their plays, wherein the Lady cries out in the same, or very similar, words with Glycerium. I do not, however, remember any play where the Lady in the Straw produces so many pleasant circumstances, as in the play before us; nor is there, I think, any one of those circumstances, except the crying out, which might not be represented on our Stage. This act, and the next, which are entirely built on the delivery of Glycerium, are the most humorous of the five; and yet these very acts seem to have been the most obnoxious to the delicacy of the modern imitators of our Author. Sir Richard Steele, indeed, departed in many other circumstances from the Fable of Terence, so that it is no wonder he took the advantage of bringing our Glycerium on the Stage in the person of Indiana: but Baron, who has wrought his whole piece on the Ground of Terence, thought it necessary to new-mould these two Acts, and has introduced Glycerium merely to fill up the chasm created by the omission of the other incidents. Baron, I doubt not, judged right in thinking it unsafe to hazard them on the French Stage: but it must be obvious to every reader that the dearest and most insipid parts of Baron’s play are those scenes in which he deviates from Terence.

* Your incidents, &c.] Non sat commode divisa sunt temporibus tibi, Dave, hæc. A metaphor taken from the Theatre. DACIER.

Had, in the real Nuptial of my Son,
 Come thus upon me unprepar'd, what sport,¹
 What scorn he'd have expos'd me to? But now
 At his own peril be it. I'm secure.

S C E N E I I I.

Re-enter LESBIA.—ARCHYLLIS appears at the door.

Lesbia to Arch. within.] As yet, Archyllis, all the symptoms seem

As good as might be wish'd in her condition:

First, let her make ablution: after that,

Drink what I've order'd her, and just so much:

And presently I will be here again. [coming forward.

Now, by this good day, Master Pamphilus

Has got a chopping Boy: Heav'n grant it live!

For he's a worthy Gentleman, and scorn'd

To do a wrong to this young innocent. [Exit.

S C E N E I V.

Simo. This too, where's he that knows you wou'd not swear
 Was your contrivance.

Davus. My Contrivance! what, Sir?

Simo.

Simo. While in the House, forsooth, the midwife gave
No orders for the Lady in the Straw :
But having issued forth into the Street,
Bawls out most lustily to those within.
—Oh Davus, am I then so much your Scorn?
Seem I so proper to be play'd upon,
With such a shallow, barefac'd, imposition?
You might at least, in reverence, have us'd
Some Spice of Art, wer't only to pretend
You fear'd my anger, shou'd I find you out.

Davus. I'faith now he deceives himself, not I. [aside.]

Simo. Did not I give you warning? threaten too,
In case you play'd me false? But all in vain:
For what car'd you?—What! think you I believe
This story of a child by Pamphilus?

Davus. I see his error: Now I know my game. [aside.]

Simo. Why don't you answer?

Davus. What! you don't believe it?
As if you had not been inform'd of this? [archly.]

Simo. I been inform'd?

Davus. What then you found it out? [archly.]

Simo. D'ye laugh at me?

Davus. You must have been inform'd:
Or whence this shrewd suspicion?

Simo.

Simo. Whence! from you:

Because I know you.

Davus. Meaning, this was done

By my Advice.

Simo. Beyond all doubt: I know it:

Davus. You do not know me, Simo.—

Simo. I not know you?

Davus. For if I do but speak, immediately
You think yourself impos'd on.—

Simo. Falsely, hey?

Davus. So that I dare not ope my lips before you.

Simo. All that I know is this; that nobody
Has been deliver'd here.

Davus. You've found it out?

Yet by and bye they'll bring the bantling here,
And lay it at our door. Remember, Sir,
I give you warning that will be the case;
That you may stand prepar'd, nor after say,
'Twas done by Davus's advice, his tricks!
I wou'd fain cure your ill opinion of me.

Simo. But how d'ye know?

Davus. I've heard so, and believe so.
Besides a thousand things concur to lead
To this conjecture. In the first place, the

Profess'd

Profess'd herself with child by Pamphilus:
 That proves a falsehood. Now that she perceives
 A nuptial preparation at our house,
 A maid's dispatch'd immediately to bring
 A midwife to her, and withal a child*:
 You too they will contrive shall see the child,
 Or else the Wedding must proceed.

Simo. How's this?

Having discover'd such a plot on foot,
 Why did you not directly tell my Son?

Davus. Who then has drawn him from her but myself?
 For we all know how much he doated on her:
 But now he wishes for a Wife. In fine,
 Leave that affair to me; and you mean while Pursue, as you've begun, the Nuptials; which
 The Gods, I hope, will prosper!

Simo. Get you in.

Wait for me there, and see that you prepare
 What's requisite.

[Exit Davus.]

He has not wrought upon me
 To yield implicit credit to his tale,
 Nor do I know if all he said be true.

* And withal a child.] This was a piece of roguery very common in Greece, where they often deceived the old men by supposititious children. DACIER.

But, true or false, it matters not: to me
 My Son's own promise is the main concern.
 Now to meet Chremes, and to beg his daughter
 In marriage with my Son: If I succeed,
 What can I rather wish, than to behold
 Their marriage-rites to-day? For since my Son
 Has given me his word, I've not a doubt,
 Should he refuse, but I may force him to it:
 And to my wishes see where Chremes comes.

S C E N E V.

Enter CHREMES*.

Simo. Chremes, Good day!

Chremes. The very man I look'd for.

Simo. And I for you.

Chremes. Well met.—Some persons came
 To tell me you inform'd them, that my daughter
 Was to be married to your Son to-day:
 And therefore came I here, and fain wou'd know
 Whether 'tis you or they have lost their wits.

* Enter CHREMES.] Chremes is a humane, natural, unaffected old gentleman. Sealand in the Conscious Lovers, the English Chremes, is a sensible respectable merchant. Both the characters are properly sustained: but Chremes being induced first to renew his consent to the match, and afterwards wrought upon by occurrences arising in the fable to withdraw it again, renders his character more essential to the Drama, than Sealand's.

Simo.

Simo. A moment's hearing; you shall be inform'd,
What I request, and what you wish to know.

Chremes. I hear: what would you? speak.

Simo. Now by the Gods;
Now by our friendship, Chremes, which, begun
In infancy, has still encreas'd with age;
Now by your only daughter, and my son,
Whose preservation wholly rests on you;
Let me intreat this boon: and let the match
Which should have been, still be.

Chremes. Why, why intreat?
Knowing you ought not to beseech this of me.
Think you, that I am other than I was,
When first I gave my promise? If the match
Be good for both, e'en call them forth to wed.
But if their union promises more harm
Than good to both, You also, I beseech you,
Consult our common interest, as if
You were her father, Pamphilus my son.

Simo. E'en in that spirit, I desire it, Chremes, Intreat it may be done; nor would intreat,
But that occasion urges.

Chremes. What occasion?

Simo. A difference 'twixt Glycerium and my son.

Chremes. I hear. [ironically.

Simo. A breach so wide as gives me hopes
To sep'rate them for ever.

Chremes. Idle tales!

Simo. Indeed 'tis thus.

Chremes. Ay marry, thus it is.
Quarrels of lovers but renew their love.

Simo. Prevent we then, I pray, this mischief now;
While time permits, while yet his passion's fore
From contumelies; e'er these womens' wiles,
Their wicked arts, and tears made up of fraud
Shake his weak mind, and melt it to compassion.
Give him a wife: By intercourse with her,
Knit by the bonds of wedlock, soon, I hope,
He'll rise above the guilt that sinks him now.

Chremes. So you believe: for me, I cannot think
That he'll be constant, or that I can bear it.

Simo. How can you know, unless you make the trial?

Chremes. Ay, but to make that trial on a daughter
Is hard indeed.

Simo. The mischief, should he fail,
Is only this: divorce, which heav'n forbid!
But mark what benefits if he amend!
First, to your friend you will restore a son;

Gain to yourself a son-in-law, and match
Your daughter to an honest husband.

Chremes. Well!

Since you're so thoroughly convinc'd 'tis right,
I can deny you naught that lies in me.

Simo. I see I ever lov'd you justly, Chremes.

Chremes. But then —

Simo. But what?

Chremes. Whence is't you know
That there's a difference between them?

Simo. Davus,
Davus, in all their secrets, told me so;
Advis'd me too, to hasten on the match
As fast as possible. Wou'd he, d'ye think,
Do that, unless he were full well assur'd
My son desir'd it too?—Hear, what he says.
Ho there! call Davus forth.—But here he comes.

S C E N E VI.

Enter DAVUS.

Davus. I was about to seek you.

Simo. What's the matter?

Davus. Why is not the bride sent for? it grows late.

Simo. D'ye hear him?—Davus, I for some time past
Was fearful of you; left, like other slaves,
As slaves go now, you should put tricks upon me,
And baffle me, to favour my son's love.

Davus. I, Sir?

Simo. I thought so: and in fear of that Conceal'd a secret which I'll now disclose.

Davus. What secret, Sir?

Simo. I'll tell you: for I now
Almost begin to think you may be trusted.

Davus. You've found what sort of man I am at last.

Simo. No marriage was intended.

Davus. How! none!

Simo. None.

All counterfeit, to sound my son and you.

Davus. How say you?

Simo. Even so.

Davus. Alack, alack!

I never could have thought it. Ah, what art! [archly.

Simo. Hear me. No sooner had I sent you in,
But opportunely I encounter'd Chremes.

Davus. How! are we ruin'd then? [aside.

Simo. I told him all,

That

That you had just told me,——

Davus. Confusion! how? [aside.

Simo. Begg'd him to grant his daughter, and at length
With much ado prevail'd.

Davus. Undone! [aside.

Simo. How's that? [overhearing.

Davus. Well done! I said.

Simo. My good friend Chremes then
Is now no obstacle.

Chremes. I'll home awhile,
Order due preparations, and return. [Exit.

Simo. Prithee, now, Davus, seeing you alone
Have brought about this match——

Davus. Yes, I alone.

Simo. Endeavour farther to amend my son.

Davus. Most diligently.

Simo. It were easy now,
While his mind's irritated.

Davus. Be at peace.

Simo. Do then: where is he?

Davus. Probably, at home.

Simo. I'll in, and tell him, what I've now told you. [Exit.

SCENE VII.

DAVUS alone.

Loft and undone! To prifon with me ftrait!
 No prayer, no plea: for I have ruin'd all:
 Deceiv'd the old man, hamper'd Pamphilus
 With marriage; marriage, brought about to-day
 By my fole means; beyond the hopes of one;
 Againft the other's will.— Oh cunning fool!
 Had I been quiet, all had yet been well.
 But fee, he's coming. Would my neck were broken! [retires.]

SCENE VIII.

Enter PAMPHILUS; DAVUS behind.

Pam. Where is this villain that has ruin'd me?

Davus. I'm a loft man.

Pam. And yet I muft confefs,
 That I deferv'd this, being fuch a dolt,
 A very ideot, to commit my fortunes
 To a vile flave. I fuffer for my folly,
 But will at leaft take vengeance upon him.

Davus. If I can but efcape this mifchief now,

I'll

I'll answer for hereafter.

Pam. To my father
What shall I say?—And can I then refuse,
Who have but now consented? with what face?
I know not what to do.

Davus. I'faith, nor I;
And yet it takes up all my thoughts. I'll tell him
I've hit on something to delay the match.

Pam. Oh! [seeing Davus.

Davus. I am feen.

Pam. So, Good Sir! What say you?
See, how I'm hamper'd with your fine advice.

Davus coming forward.] But I'll deliver you.

Pam. Deliver me?

Davus. Certainly, Sir.

Pam. What, as you did just now?

Davus. Better, I hope.

Pam. And can you then believe
That I would trust you, Rascal? You amend
My broken fortunes, or redeem them lost?
You, who to-day, from the most happy state,
Have thrown me upon marriage.—Did not I Foretell it would be thus?

Davus. You did indeed.

Pam.

Pam. And what do you deserve for this? *

Davus. The gallows.

—Yet suffer me to take a little breath,
I'll devise something presently.

Pam. Alas, †

I have not leisure for your punishment.
The time demands attention to myself,
Nor will be wasted in revenge on you.

* And what do you deserve for this?] Quid meritis? This question is taken from the custom of the Athenians, who never condemned a criminal without first asking what punishment he thought he deserved; and according to the nature of the culprit's answer, they mitigated or aggravated his punishment. DACIER.

The Commentators cite a passage exactly parallel from the Frogs of Aristophanes.

† Alas, I have not leisure, &c.] Characters too faintly drawn are the opposite of Caricature. Pamphilus in the Andrian is, in my mind a faint character. Davus has precipitated him into a marriage that he abhors. His mistress has but just been brought to-bed. He has a hundred reasons to be out of humour. Yet he takes all in good part. DIDEROT.

I cannot think there is much justice in the above observation. Pamphilus appears to me to have all the feelings of an amiable and ingenuous mind. There is an observation of Donatus on Simo's observing to Davus, at the end of the second Act, that his son appeared to him to be rather melancholy, which is in my opinion infinitely more just, and applicable to the character of Pamphilus than the remark of our ingenious French Critick. It has been reserved for this place on purpose to oppose them to each other. The passage and note on it are as follow.

Yet in my mind he seem'd a little sad.] The propriety of behaviour necessary to the different characters of the Son and the Lover, is wonderfully preserved in this instance. A deceit, sustained with great assurance, would not have been agreeable to the character of an ingenuous youth: and it would have been improbable in the character of the Lover to have entirely smothered his concern. He suppresses it therefore in some measure, because the thing was to be concealed; but could not assume a thorough joyfulness, because his disposition and his passion inspired him with melancholy. DONATUS.

It may be added also, as a further answer to Diderot, that the words with which Pamphilus concludes this act, alluding to his present situation, assign a very natural reason for his subduing the transports of his anger towards Davus.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

CHARINUS alone.

IS this to be believ'd, or to be told?
 Can then such inbred malice live in man,
 To joy in ill, and from another's woes
 To draw his own delight? — Ah, is't then so?
 — Yes, such there are, the meanest of mankind,
 Who, from a sneaking bashfulness, at first
 Dare not refuse; but when the time comes on
 To make their promise good, then force perforce
 Open themselves and fear: yet must deny.
 Then too, oh shameless impudence, they cry,
 “ Who then are you? and what are you to me?
 “ Why should I render up my love to you?
 “ Faith, neighbour, charity begins at home.”
 — Speak of their broken faith, they blush not, they,
 Now throwing off that shame they ought to wear,
 Which they before assum'd without a cause.
 — What shall I do? go to him? on my wrongs
 Expostulate, and throw reproaches on him?

K

What

What will that profit, say you?—very much.
I shall at least embitter his delight,
And gratify my anger.

S C E N E I I.

To him PAMPHILUS and DAVUS.

Pam. Oh, Charinus,
By my Imprudence, unless Heav'n forefend,
I've ruin'd both myself and you.

Char. Imprudence!
Paltry evasion! You have broke your faith.

Pam. What now?

Char. And do you think that words like these Can baffle me again?

Pam. What means all this?

Char. Soon as I told you of my passion for her,
Then she had charms for you.—Ah, senseless fool,
To judge your disposition by my own!

Pam. You are mistaken.

Char. Was your joy no joy,
Without abusing a fond Lover's mind,
Fool'd on with idle hopes?—Well, take her.

Pam. Take her?

Alas, you know not what a wretch I am :
How many cares this slave has brought upon me,
My rascal here.

Char. No wonder, if he takes Example from his master.

Pam. Ah, you know not
Me, or my love, or else you would not talk thus.

Char. Oh yes, I know it all. You had but now
A dreadful altercation with your father :
And therefore he's enrag'd, nor could prevail
On you, forsooth, to wed. [ironically.]

Pam. To shew you then,
How little you conceive of my distress,
These nuptials were mere semblance, mock'ry all,
Nor was a wife intended me.

Char. I know it :
You are constrained, poor man, by inclination.

Pam. Nay, but have patience ! you don't know—

Char. I know
That you're to marry her.

Pam. Why rack me thus ?
Nay hear ! He never ceas'd to importune
That I wou'd tell my father, I would wed ;
So prest, and urg'd, that he at length prevail'd.

Char. Who did this?

Pam. Davus.

Char. Davus!

Pam. Davus all.

Char. Wherefore?

Pam. I know not: but I know the Gods
Meant in their anger I should listen to him.

Char. Is it so, Davus?

Davus. Even so.

Char. How, villain?

The Gods confound you for it!—Tell me, wretch,
Had all his most inveterate foes desir'd
To throw him on this marriage, what advice
Could they have given else?

Davus. I am deceiv'd,
But not dishearten'd.

Char. True. [ironically.

Davus. This way has fail'd;
We'll try another way: unless you think
Because the business has gone ill at first,
We cannot graft advantage on misfortune.

Pam. Oh ay, I warrant you, if you look to't,
Out of one wedding you can work me two.

Davus. Pamphilus, 'tis my duty, as your slave,

To strive with might and main, by day and night,
 With hazard of my life, to do you service:
 'Tis your's, if I am crost, to pardon me.
 My undertakings fail indeed, but then
 I spare no pains. Do better, if you can,
 And fend me packing.

Pam. Ay, with all my heart:
 Place me but where you found me first.

Davus. I will.

Pam. But do it instantly.

Davus. Hift! hold awhile:
 I hear the creaking of Glycerium's door.

Pam. Nothing to you.

Davus. I'm thinking.

Pam. What, at last?

Davus. Your business shall be done, and presently.

S C E N E I I I .

Enter M Y S I S .

Myfis to Glycer. within.] Be where he will, I'll find your Pamphilus,
 And bring him with me. Meanwhile, you, my soul,
 Forbear to vex yourself.

Pam.

Pam. Myfis!

Myfis. Who's there?

Oh Pamphilus, well met, Sir!

Pam. What's the matter?

Myfis. My Mistress, by the love you bear her, begs
Your presence instantly. She longs to see you.

Pam. Ah, I'm undone: This fore breaks out afresh.
Unhappy that we are, thro' your curse means,
To be tormented thus! [to Davus.]—She has been told
A nuptial is prepar'd, and therefore sends.

Char. From which how safe you were, had he been quiet!
[pointing to Davus.]

Davus. Ay, if he raves not of himself enough,
Do, irritate him. [to Charinus.]

Myfis. Truly that's the cause;
And therefore 'tis, poor soul, she sorrows thus.

Pam. Myfis, I swear to thee by all the Gods,
I never will desert her: tho' assur'd
That I for her make all mankind my foes.
I fought her, carried her: our hearts are one,
And farewell they that wish us put asunder!
Death, nought but death shall part us.

Myfis. I revive.

Pam. Apollo's oracles are not more true.

If that my father may be wrought upon,
To think I hinder'd not the match, 'tis well:
But if that cannot be, come what come may,
Why let him know, 'twas I.—What think you now? [to Char.

Char. That we are wretches both.

Davus. My brain's at work.

Char. Oh brave!

Pam. I know what you'd attempt.

Davus. Well, well!

I will effect it for you.

Pam. Ay, but now.

Davus. E'en now.

Char. What is't?

Davus. For him, Sir, not for you.

Be not mistaken.

Char. I am satisfied.

Pam. Say, what do you propose?

Davus. This day, I fear,

Is scarce sufficient for the execution,

So think not I have leisure to relate.

Hence then! You hinder me: hence, hence I say!

Pam. I'll to Glycerium. [Exit.

Davus. Well, and what mean you?

Whither will you, Sir?

Char.

Char. Shall I speak the truth?

Davus. Oh to be sure: now for a tedious tale!

Char. What will become of me?

Davus. How! not content!

Is it not then sufficient, if I give you
The respite of a day, a little day,
By putting off his wedding?

Char. Ay, but Davus,— Davus. But what?

Char. That I may wed—

Davus. Ridiculous!

Char. If you succeed, come to me.

Davus. Wherefore come?

I can't assist you.

Char. Should it so fall out—

Davus. Well, well, I'll come.

Char. If ought, I am at home.

[Exit.

S C E N E V.

Manent D A V U S, M Y S I S.

Davus. Myfis, wait here till I come forth.

Myfis. For what?

Davus. It must be so.

Myfis.

Myfis. Make haste then.

Davus. In a Moment.

[Exit to Glycerium's.]

S C E N E VI.

M Y S I S alone.

Can we securely then count nothing our's?
Oh all ye Gods! I thought this Pamphilus
The greatest good my mistress could obtain,
Friend, lover, husband, ev'ry way a blessing:
And yet what woe, poor wretch, endures she not
On his account? Alas, more ill than good.
But here comes Davus.

S C E N E VII.

Re-enter DAVUS with the child.

Myfis. Prithee, man, what now?
Where are you carrying the child?

Davus. Oh, Myfis,
Now have I need of all your ready wit,
And all your cunning.

Myfis. What are you about?

L

Davus:

Davus. Quick, take the boy, and lay him at our door.

Myfis. What on the bare ground?

Davus. From the altar then *

Take herbs and strew them underneath.

Myfis. And why

Can't you do that yourself?

Davus. Because, that if

My master chance to put me to my oath

That 'twas not I who laid it there, I may

With a safe conscience swear. [gives her the child.]

Myfis. I understand.

But pray how came this sudden qualm upon you?

Davus. Nay, but be quick, that you may comprehend
What I propose. — [Myfis lays the child at Simo's door.]

Oh Jupiter! [looking out.]

Myfis. What now?

Davus. Here comes the father of the bride! — I change

* From the altar then, &c.] Donatus and Scaliger the father have written that the Altar mentioned here, was the altar usually placed on the stage. When a Tragedy was acted, the altar was dedicated to Bacchus; when a Comedy, to Apollo. But in my opinion the Stage-Altar has no connection with this passage: This adventure is not to be considered as an incident in a Comedy, but as a thing which passes in the street. Probability therefore must be preserved; which it cannot be, if one of the Stage-Altars is employed in this place. At Athens every house had an altar at the street door: [which street-altars are also often mentioned in Plautus.] These altars were covered with fresh herbs every day, and it is one of these altars, to which Terence here alludes. DACIER.

It was a custom among the Romans to have an altar sacred to Vesta in the entrance of their houses, whence it was called The Vestibule. EUGRAPHIUS.

My first-intended purpose. †

Myfis. What you mean

I can't imagine.

Davus. This way from the right,
I'll counterfeit to come:—And be't your care
To throw in aptly now and then a word,
To help out the discourse as need requires.

Myfis. Still what you're at, I cannot comprehend.
But if I can assist, as you know best,
Not to obstruct your purposes, I'll stay. [Davus retires.

S C E N E VIII.

Enter CHREMES going towards Simo's.

Chremes. Having provided all things necessary,
I now return to bid them call the bride.
What's here? [seeing the child.] by Hercules, a child! Ha, woman,
Was't you that laid it here?

Myfis. Where is he gone? [looking after Davus.

Chremes. What, won't you answer me?

† I change my first-intended purpose.] His first intention doubtless was to go and inform Simo of the child being laid at the door. DACIER.

Myfis. looking about.] Not here: Ah me!
The fellow's gone, and left me in the lurch.

[Davus coming forward and pretending not to see them.

Davus. Good heavens, what confusion at the Forum!
The people all disputing with each other!
The market-price is so confounded high. [loud.
What to say else I know not. [aside.

Myfis to Davus.] What d'ye mean [Chremes retires, and listens to their conversation.
By leaving me alone?

Davus. What farce is this?
Ha, Myfis, whence this Child? Who brought it here?

Myfis. Have you your wits, to ask me such a question?

Davus. Whom should I ask, when no one else is here?

Chremes behind.] I wonder whence it comes. [to himself.

Davus. Wilt answer me? [loud.

Myfis. Ah! [confused.

Davus. This way to the right! [apart to Myfis.

Myfis. You're raving mad.

Was't not yourself?

Davus. I charge you not a word,
But what I ask you. [apart to Myfis.

Myfis. Do you threaten me?

Davus. Whence comes this child? [loud.

Myfis.

Myfis. From our house.

Davus. Ha! ha! ha!

No wonder that a harlot has assurance.

Chremes. This is the Andrian's servant-maid, I take it.

Davus. Do we then seem to you such proper folks
To play these tricks upon? [loud to Myf.

Chremes. I came in time. [to himself.

Dav. Make haste, and take your bantling from our door. [loud.
Hold! do not stir from where you are, besure. [softly.

Myfis. A plague upon you: you so terrify me!

Davus. Wench, did I speak to you or no? [loud.

Myfis. What would you?

Davus. What would I? Say, whose child have you laid here?
Tell me. [loud.

Myfis. You don't know?

Davus. Plague of what I know:
Tell what I ask. [softly.

Myfis. Your's.

Davus. Ours? Whose? [loud.

Myfis. Pamphilus's.

* From our house.] A NOBIS. Most of the Books read a VOBIS, but I am persuaded the other is the right reading. The fact is, the child really came from Glycerium's, and Davus's laughing at the impudence of Myfis in owning it, and the immediate observation of Chremes, that she was the Andrian's maid, is more agreeable to this sense. Besides the mention of the other family is reserved for the answers drawn from Myfis by Davus's asking her whose child it was.

Myfis.

Davus. How say you? Pamphilus's? [loud.

Myfis. Why is't not?

Chremes. I had good cause to be against this match. [to himself.

Davus. O monstrous impudence! [bawling.

Myfis. Why all this noise?

Davus. Did not I see this child convey'd by stealth
Into your house last night?

Myfis. Oh rogue!

Davus. 'Tis true.

I saw old Canthara stuff'd out?

Myfis. Thank heav'n,

* Some free-women were present at her labour?

Davus. Troth, she don't know the gentleman, for whom She plays this game. She thinks, should Chremes see
The Child laid here, he would not grant his daughter.
Faith, he would grant her the more willingly.

Chremes. Not he indeed. [to himself.

Davus. But now, one word for all,
Take up the child; or I shall trundle him
Into the middle of the street, and roll
You, madam, in the mire.

Myfis. The fellow's drunk.

* Some free-women.] Free-women: For in Greece as well as in Italy, slaves were not admitted to give evidence. DACIER.

Davus. One piece of knavery begets another :
Now, I am told, 'tis whisper'd all about,
That she's a citizen of Athens — [loud.

Chremes. How !

Davus. * And that by law he will be forc'd to wed her.

Myfis. Why prithee is she not a citizen ?

Chremes. What a fine scrape was I within a hair
Of being drawn into ! [to himself.

Davus. What voice is that ? [turning about.
Oh Chremes ! you are come in time. Attend !

Chremes. I have heard all already.

Davus. You've heard all ?

Chremes. Yes, all, I say, from first to last.

Davus. Indeed ?

Good lack, what knaveries ! This lying jade
Should be dragg'd hence to torture.—This is he ! [to Myf.
Think not 'twas Davus you imposed upon.

Myfis. Ah me !—Good Sir, I spoke the truth indeed.

Chremes. I know the whole.—Is Simo in the house ?

Davus. Yes Sir. [Exit Chrem.

* And that by law, &c.] Among the laws of Athens was that equitable one, which compelled the man to marry her whom he had debauched, if she was a free Woman. COOKE,

SCENE IX.

Manent DAVUS, MYSIS. Davus runs up to her.

Mysis. Don't offer to touch me, you villain!

If I don't tell my mistress every word—

Davus. Why you don't know, you fool, what good we've done.

Mysis. How should I?

Davus. This is father to the bride:

Nor could it otherwise have been contrived

That he should know what we would have him.

Mysis. Well,

You should have giv'n me notice.

Davus. Is there then *

* Is there no diff'rence, &c.] It is an observation of Voltaire's in the preface to his Comedy of L'Enfant Prodigue, that although there are various kinds of pleasantry that excite mirth, yet universal bursts of laughter are seldom produced, unless by a scene of mistake or equivoque. A thousand instances might be given to prove the truth of this judicious observation. There is scarce any writer of Comedy, who has not drawn from this source of humour. A scene founded on a misunderstanding between the parties, where the characters are all at cross purposes with each other, never fails to set the audience in a roar: nor indeed can there be a happier incident in a Comedy, if produced naturally, and managed judiciously.

The scenes in this act, occasioned by the artifice of Davus concerning the child, do not fall directly under the observation of Voltaire, but are however, so much of the same colour, that if represented on the stage, they would, I doubt not, have the like effect, and be the best means of confuting those infidel Critics, who maintain that Terence has no humour. I do not remember a scene in any Comedy, where there is such a natural complication of pleasant circumstances. Davus's sudden change of his intentions on seeing Chremes, without having time to explain himself to Mysis; her confusion and comical distress, together with the genuine simplicity of her answers; and the conclusion drawn by Chremes from their supposed quarrel; are all finely imagined, and directly calculated for the purposes of exciting the highest mirth in the spectators. The words of Davus to Mysis in this speech "Is there then, &c." have the air of an oblique praise of this

No diff'rence, think you, whether all you say
Falls naturally from the heart, or comes
From dull premeditation?

S C E N E X.

Enter CRITO.

Crito. In this street
They say that Chrysis liv'd: who rather chose
To heap up riches here by wanton ways,
Than to live poor and honestly at home:
She dead, her fortune comes by law to me.
But I see persons to enquire of. [goes up.] Save you!

Myfis. Good now, who's that I see? is it not Crito, Chrysis's Kinsman? Ay, the very same.

Crito. O Myfis, save you!

Myfis. Save you, Crito!

scene from the Poet himself, shewing with what art it is introduced, and how naturally it is sustained.

Sir Richard Steele had deviated so much from Terence in the original construction of his fable, that he had no opportunity of working this scene into it. Baron, who, I suppose, was afraid to hazard it on the French Theatre, fills up the chasm by bringing Glycerium on the stage. She, amused by Davus with a forged tale of the falsehood of Pamphilus, throws herself at the feet of Chremes, and prevails on him once more to break off the intended match with Philumena. In consequence of this alteration, the most lively part of the comedy in Terence, becomes the gravest in Baron; the artifice of Davus is carried on with the most starch formality; and the whole incident, as conducted in the French imitation, loses all that air of ease and pleasantry, which it wears in the original.

M

Crito.

Crito. Chryfis

Is then — ha?

Myfis. Ay, she has left us, poor souls!

Crito. And ye; how go ye on here? — pretty well?

Myfis. We? — as we can, as the old saying goes,
When as we would we cannot.

Crito. And Glycerium,
Has she found out her parents?

Myfis. Wou'd she had!

Crito. Not yet! an ill wind blew me hither then.
For truly, had I been appriz'd of that,
I'd ne'er have sat foot here: For this Glycerium
Was always call'd and thought to be her sister.
What Chryfis left, She takes possession of:
And now for me, a stranger, to commence
A law-suit here, how good and wise it were,
Other examples teach me. She, I warrant,
Has got her some gallant too, some defender:
For she was growing up a jolly girl
When first she journied hither. They will cry
That I'm a petty-fogger, fortune-hunter,
A beggar. — And besides it were not well
To leave her in distress.

Myfis. Good soul! Troth, Crito,

You

You have the good old-fashion'd honesty.

Crito. Well, since I am arriv'd here, bring me to her,
That I may see her.

Myfis. Ay, with all my heart.

Davus. I will in with them: for I wou'd not chuse
That our old gentleman should see me now. [Exeunt.

ACT V. SCENE I.

CHREMES, SIMO.

Chremes. ENOUGH already, Simo, and enough
 I've shewn my friendship for you ; hazarded
 Enough of peril : urge me then no more !
 Wishing to please you, I had near destroy'd
 My daughter's peace and happiness for ever.

Simo. Ah, Chremes, I must now intreat the more,
 More urge you to confirm the promis'd boon.

Chremes. Mark, how unjust you are thro' wilfulness !
 So you obtain what you demand, you set
 No bounds to my compliance, nor consider
 What you request ; for if you did consider,
 You'd cease to load me with these injuries.

Simo. What injuries ?

Chremes. Is that a question now ?
 Have you not driven me to plight my child
 To one possess'd with other love, averse
 To marriage ; to expose her to divorce,
 And crazy nuptials ; by her woe and bane

To

To work a cure for your distemper'd son?
You had prevail'd; I travell'd in the match,
While circumstances would admit; but now
The case is chang'd, content you: — It is said,
That she's a citizen; a child is born:
Prithee excuse us!

Simo. Now, for heaven's sake,
Believe not Them, whose interest it is
To make him vile and abject as themselves.
These stories are all feign'd, concerted all,
To break the match: when the occasion's past,
That urges them to this, they will desist.

Chremes. Oh, you mistake: E'en now I saw the maid Wrangling with Davus.

Simo. Artifice! mere trick.

Chremes. Ay, but in earnest; and when neither knew
That I was there.

Simo. It may be so: and Davus
Told me before-hand they'd attempt all this;
Though I, I know not how, forgot to tell you.

SCENE II.

Enter DAVUS from Glycerium's.

Davus to himself.] He may be easy now, I warrant him —

Chremes. See yonder's Davus.

Simo. Ha! whence comes the rogue?

Davus. By my assistance, and this stranger's sake. [to himself.]

Simo. What mischief's this? [listening.]

Davus. A more commodious man,

Arriving just in season, at a time

So critical, I never knew. [to himself.]

Simo. A knave!

Who's that he praises? [listening.]

Davus. All is now secure. [to himself.]

Simo. Why don't I speak to him?

Davus. My master here! [turning about.]

What shall I do? [to himself.]

Simo. Good Sir, your humble servant! [sneering.]

Davus. Oh, Simo! and our Chremes!—All is now Prepar'd within.

Simo. You've taken special care. [ironically.]

Davus. E'en call them when you please.

Simo. Oh, mighty fine!

That

That to be fure is all that's wanting now.

—But tell me, Sir! what bufinefs had you there?

[pointing to Glycerium's.

Davus. I? [confused.

Simo. You.

Davus. I —? [stammering.

Simo. You, Sir.

Davus. I went in but now. [disordered.

Simo. As if I ask'd, how long it was ago.

Davus. With Pamphilus.

Simo. Is Pamphilus within?

—Oh torture!—Did not you assure me, firrah,
They were at variance?

Davus. So they are.

Simo. Why then

Is Pamphilus within?

Chremes. Oh, why d'ye think?

He's gone to quarrel with her. [sneering.

Davus. Nay but, Chremes,

There's more in this, and you shall hear strange news.

There's an old contryman, I know not who,

Is juft arriv'd here; confident and shrewd;

His look bespeaks him of some consequence.

A grave severity is in his face,

And

And credit in his words.

Simo. What story now?

Davus. Nay, nothing, sir, but what I heard him say.

Simo. And what says he, then?

Davus. That he's well assur'd Glycerium's an Athenian citizen.

Simo. Ho, Dromo! Dromo! [calling.

Davus. What now?

Simo. Dromo!

Davus. Hear me.

Simo. Speak but a word more — Dromo!

Davus. Pray, Sir, hear!

S C E N E III.

Enter DROMO.

Dromo. Your pleasure, Sir?

Simo. Here drag him headlong in,
And trufs the rascal up immediately.

Dromo. Whom?

Simo. Davus.

Davus. Why?

Simo. Because I'll have it so.
Take him, I say.

Davus.

Davus. For what offence?

Simo. Off with him!

Davus. If it appear that I've said ought but truth,
Put me to death.

Simo. I will not hear. I'll trounce you.

Davus. But tho' it should prove true, Sir!

Simo. True or false.

See that you keep him bound: and do you hear?

* Bind the slave hand and foot. Away!

[Exeunt Dromo and Davus.]

S C E N E I V.

Manent SIMO, CHREMES.

By heav'n,

As I do live, I'll make you know this day

What peril lies in trifling with a master,

And make Him know what 'tis to plague a father.

Chremes. Ah, be not in such rage.

Simo. Oh Chremes, Chremes,

Filial unkindness!—Don't you pity me?

To feel all this for such a thankless son!—

* Bind the slave hand and foot.] QUADRUPEDEM constringito. It was usual among the Athenians to tie criminals, hands and feet together, like a calf. ECHARD.

Here, Pamphilus, come forth! ho, Pamphilus!

Have you no shame?

[calling at Glycerium's door.]

S C E N E V.

Enter PAMPHILUS.

Pam. Who calls?—Undone! my father!

Simo. What say you? Most——

Chremes. Ah, rather speak at once

Your purpose, Simo, and forbear reproach.

Simo. As if 'twere possible to utter aught
Severer than he merits!—Tell me then; [to Pam.
Glycerium is a citizen?

Pam. They say so.

Simo. They say so!—Oh amazing impudence!—
Does he consider what he says? does he Repent the deed? or does his colour take
The hue of shame?—To be so weak of soul,
Against the custom of our citizens,
* Against the law, against his father's will,
To wed himself to shame and this vile woman.

* Against the law.] There was a law among the Athenians, that no citizen should marry a stranger; which law also excluded such as were not born of two citizens, from all offices of trust and honour. See Plutarch's Life of Pericles. COOKE.

Pam.

Pam. Wretch that I am!

Simo. Ah, Pamphilus! d'ye feel
Your wretchedness at last? Then, then, when first
You wrought upon your mind at any rate
To gratify your passion; from that hour
Well might you feel your state of wretchedness.
—But why give in to this? Why torture thus,
Why vex my spirit? Why afflict my age
For his distemp'rature? Why rue his sins?
—No; let him have her, joy in her, live with her.

Pam. My father!—

Simo. How, my father!—can I think *
You want this father? You that for yourself
A home, a wife, and children have acquir'd
Against your father's will? And witnesses
Suborn'd, to prove that she's a citizen?
—You've gain'd your point.

Pam. My father, but one word!

Simo. What would you say?

Chremes. Nay, hear him, Simo.

Simo. Hear him?

What must I hear then, Chremes?

* Simo. How my father, &c.] Donatus is full of admiration of this speech, and tells us that it was not taken from Menander, but original in Terence.

Chremes. Let him speak.

Simo. Well, let him speak: I hear him.

Pam. I confefs,
I love Glycerium: if it be a fault,
That too I do confefs. To you, my father,
I yield myself: dispose me as you please!
Command me! Say, that I shall take a wife;
Leave Her;—I will endure it, as I may.—
This only I beseech you, think not I
Suborn'd this old man hither.—Suffer me
To clear myself, and bring him here before you.

Simo. Bring him here!

Pam. Let me, father!

Chremes. 'Tis but just:
Permit him!

Pam. Grant me this!

Simo. Well, be it so.

* Exit Pamphilus.

* Exit Pamphilus.] The above scene, admirable as it is, had not, it seems, sufficient temptations for Sir Richard Steele to induce him to include it in his plan of the Conscious Lovers. Bevil and his Father are never brought to an open rupture, like Simo and Pamphilus, but rather industriously kept from coming to any explanation, which is one reason of the insipidity and want of spirit in their characters. It must be obvious to every reader, how naturally this scene brings on the catastrophe: how injudiciously then has the English Poet deprived his audience of the pleasure that must have arisen from it in the representation, and contented himself with making Sir J. Bevil declare, at entering with his son, after the discovery is “ over, Your good sister, Sir, has with the story

“ of your daughter’s fortune, filled us with sur-
“ prize and joy! Now all exceptions are re“ moved; my Son has now avowed his love,
“ and turned all former jealousies and doubts
“ to approbation, and, I am told, your good“ ness has consented to reward him.” How many dramatick incidents, what fine pictures of the manners, has Terence drawn from the circumstances huddled together in these few lines of Sir Richard Steele!

I could

I could bear all this bravely, Chremes ; more,
Much more, to know that he deceiv'd me not.

Chremes. For a great fault a little punishment
Suffices to a father.

S C E N E V.

Re-enter PAMPHILUS with CRITO.

Crito. Say no more !
Any of these inducements would prevail :
Or your intreaty, or that it is truth,
Or that I wish it for Glycerium's sake.

Chremes. Whom do I see ? Crito, the Andrian ?
Nay certainly 'tis Crito.

Crito. Save you, Chremes !

Chremes. What has brought you to Athens ?

Crito. Accident.

But is this Simo ?

Chremes. Ay.

Simo. Asks he for me ?

So Sir, you say that this Glycerium
Is an Athenian citizen ?

Chremes. Do you
Deny it ?

Simo.

Simo. What then are you come prepar'd?

Crito. Prepar'd! for what?

Simo. And dare you ask for what?

Shall you go on thus with impunity?

Lay snares for inexperience'd, lib'ral, youth,

With fraud, temptation, and fair promises

Soothing their minds?——

Crito. Have you your wits?

Simo. —And then

With marriage folder up their harlot loves?

Pam. Alas, I fear the stranger will not bear this. [aside.]

Chremes. Knew you this person, Simo, you'd not think thus:
He's a good man.

Simo. A good man he?—To come,
Altho' at Athens never seen till now,
So opportunely on the wedding-day!—
Is such a fellow to be trusted, Chremes?

Pam. * But that I fear my father, I could make
That matter clear to him. [aside.]

Simo. A Sharper!

* But that I fear, &c.] Ni metuum patrem, habeo pro illa re illum quod moneam probe. Madam Dacier, and several English translations, make Pamphilus say that he could give Crito a hint or two. What hints he could propose to suggest to Crito I cannot conceive. The Italian translation, printed with the Vatican Terence, seems to understand the words in the same manner that I have translated them, in which sense (the pronoun illum referring to Simo instead of Crito) they seem to be the most natural words of Pamphilus on occasion of his father's anger, and the speech immediately preceding.

Crito.

Crito. How?

Chremes. It is his humour, Crito: do not heed him.

Crito. Let him look to't. If he persists in saying Whate'er he pleases, I shall make him hear
Something that may displease him.—Do I stir
In these affairs, or make them my concern?
Bear your misfortunes patiently! For me,
If I speak true or false, shall now be known.
—“ A man of Athens once upon a time
“ Was shipwreck'd on the coast of Andros: with him
“ This very woman, then an infant. He
“ In this distress applied, it so fell out,
“ For help to Chrysis' father—

Simo. All romance.

Chremes. Let him alone.

Crito. And will he interrupt me?

Chremes. Go on.

Crito. “ Now Chrysis' father, who receiv'd him,
“ Was my relation. There I've often heard
“ The man himself declare, he was of Athens.
“ There too he died.”

Chremes. His name?

Crito. His name, so quickly?—Phanias.

Chremes. Amazement!

Crito.

Crito. By my troth, I think 'twas Phania;
But this I'm sure, he said he was of Rhamnus*.

Chremes. Oh Jupiter!

Crito. These circumstances, Chremes,
Were known to many others, then in Andros.

Chremes. Heav'n grant it may be as I wish!—Inform me,
Whose daughter, said he, was the child? his own?

Crito. No, not his own.

Chremes. Whose then?

Crito. His brother's daughter.

Chremes. Mine, mine undoubtedly!

Crito. What say you?

Simo. How!

Pam. Hark, Pamphilus!

Simo. But why believe you this?

Chremes. That Phania was my brother.

Simo. True. I knew him.

Chremes. He, to avoid the war, departed hence:
And fearing 'twere unsafe to leave the child,
Embark'd with her in quest of me for Asia:
Since when I've heard no news of him till now.

Pam. I'm scarce myself, my mind is so enrapt

* Of Rhamnus.] Rhamnus, Piræus, &c. are to be understood as maritime towns of Attica. DONATUS.

With fear, hope, joy, and wonder of so great,
So sudden happiness.

Simo. Indeed, my Chremes,
I heartily rejoice she's found your daughter.

Pam. I do believe you, father.

Chremes. But one doubt
There still remains, which gives me pain.

Pam. Away
With all your doubts! You puzzle a plain cause. [aside.

Crito. What is that doubt?

Chremes. The name does not agree.

Crito. She had another, when a child.

Chremes. What, Crito?

Can you remember?

Crito. I am hunting for it.

Pam. Shall then his memory oppose my bliss,
When I can minister the cure myself?

No, I will not permit it.—Hark you, Chremes,
The name is Pasibula.

Crito. True.

Chremes. The same.

Pam. I've heard it from herself a thousand times.

Simo. Chremes, I trust you will believe, we all Rejoice at this.

Chremes. 'Fore heaven I believe so.

Pam. And now, my father——

Simo. Peace, son! the event
Has reconcil'd me.

Pam. O thou best of fathers!
Does Chremes too confirm Glycerium mine?

Chremes. And with good cause if Simo hinder not.

Pam. Sir! [to Simo. *

Simo. Be it so.

Chremes. My daughter's portion is Ten talents, Pamphilus. †

Pam. I am content.

* P. Sir! Si. Be it so.] P. Nempe. Si. Id scilicet. Donatus, and some others after him, understand these words of Simo and Pamphilus, as requiring a fortune of Chremes with his daughter: and one of them says, that Simo, in order to explain his meaning in the representation, should produce a bag of money. This surely is precious refinement, worthy the genius of a true Commentator. Madam Dacier, who entertains a just veneration for Donatus, doubts the authenticity of the observation ascribed to him. The sense I have followed is, I think, the most obvious and natural interpretation of the words of Pamphilus and Simo, which refer to the preceding, not the subsequent speech, of Chemes.

† My daughter's portion is ten talents.] All our own translators of this poet have betrayed great ignorance in their estimations of antient sums: and Madam Dacier, and the common Latin Interpreters, seem not to have given themselves much trouble on this head: but this part of antient learning ought not to be past over slightly, since the wealth and plenty of a great and famous state are to be discovered from it. The name of the Talent ought to be preserved in a translation, as should the Mina, Half-Mina, Drachma, and Obolus, for the same reason for which Terence preserved them in his Latin Translations of Greek Plays, viz. because the scene is in Athens, and these are Attick pieces of money. The common Attick Talent, which is the Talent mentioned thro' Terence, contained sixty Minæ, as Gronovius, in a note to the Cistellaria of Plautus, and other accurate Enquirers have agreed. Ten Talents therefore were equal to 1937 l. 10 s. of our money, which we may reasonably suppose a tolerable good fortune, considering the price of provisions then in that part of Greece; which we may partly judge of from the passage, where the Obolus is mentioned in the second act of this play. COOKE.

Chremes.

Chremes. I'll to her instantly: and prithee, Crito,
Along with me! for sure she knows me not.

[* Exeunt Chremes and Crito.

Simo. Why do you not give orders instantly
To bring her to our house?

Pam. Th' advice is good.
I'll give that charge to Davus.

Simo. It can't be.

Pam. Why?

Simo. He has other business of his own,
Of nearer import to himself.

Pam. What business?

Simo. He's bound.

† Pam. Bound! how, Sir!

Simo. How, fir?—neck and heels.

* Exeunt Chremes and Crito.] Crito is, as Donatus calls him, persona in catastrophis machinata, a character formed to bring about the catastrophe. To supply his place in the fable, Sir Richard Steele has converted Phania, the brother of Chremes mentioned in the foregoing scene, into a sister, and substituted Isabella for Crito. But here, I think, and in almost every circumstance of the Discovery, the art of the English Poet is much inferior to that of his Original. Isabella does not maintain her importance in the Drama so well as Crito. Indiana indeed serves to add a degree of Pathos to the scene: but the relation of the incidents of her life, and throwing off her little ornaments in a kind of Tragedy-Rant, till Isabella appears to unravel the mystery, is surely much less natural than the minute detail of circumstances, so finely produced by our Author. It is, says Donatus, the greatest praise, when the spectator may imagine those things to happen by chance, which are produced by the utmost industry of the Poet.

† P. Bound! how, fir! Si. How fir? neck and heels.] Non RECTE vincit est.—haud ita jussu. The conceit in the original is a Pun upon the word recte, impossible to be preserved exactly in the translation. Donatus observes very well on this passage, that the jocularly of the old gentleman on this occasion, is a characteristic mark of his thorough reconciliation.

Pam. Ah, let him be enlarg'd!

Simo. It shall be done.

Pam. But instantly.

Simo. I'll in, and order it. [Exit.

Pam. Oh what a happy, happy, day is this!

S C E N E VI.

* Enter CHARINUS behind.

Char. I come to see what Pamphilus is doing :
And there he is!

Pam. And is this true?—Yes, yes,

* Enter Charinus.] He who undertakes to conduct two intrigues at a time, imposes on himself the necessity of unravelling them both at the same instant. If the principal concludes first, that which remains can support itself no longer: if, on the contrary the episode abandons the main part of the fable, there arises another inconvenience; some of the characters either disappear without reason, or shew themselves again to no end or purpose; so that the piece becomes maimed or uninteresting.

DIDEROT.

The first of the inconveniences above mentioned is that which occurs in the conclusion of this play. The discovery once made, and Glycerium given to Pamphilus, all that remains becomes cold. From the extreme brevity of this last scene, one would imagine that the Poet himself found this part of the fable languish under his hands. Some of the commentators, fond of that tediousness, which Terence was so studious to avoid, have added seventeen spurious lines of dialogue between Charinus and Chremes. But Donatus, tho' he approved of this underplot, which Terence added to the fable of Menander, yet commends his judgment in avoiding prolixity, by settling only one marriage on the stage, and dispatching the other behind the scenes. But surely the whole episode of Charinus is unnecessary, and the fable would be more clear, more compact, and more complete without it. See the first note to the second act.

The fifth act of Baron is an almost literal, though very elegant version, of this of our Author.

It is very remarkable, that though Terence is generally considered to be a grave author, as writer of a Comedy, the Andrian has much more humour and pleasantry, than either the English or French imitation of it.

I know

I know 'tis true, because I wish it so.

* Therefore I think the life of Gods eternal,
For that their joys are permanent: and now,

† My soul hath her content so absolute,

That I too am immortal, if no ill

Step in betwixt me and this happiness.

Oh, for a bosom-friend now to pour out

My ecstasies before him!

Char. What's this rapture? [listening.

Pam. Oh, yonder's Davus: nobody more welcome:

For he, I know, will join in transport with me.

* Therefore I think, &c.] This whole sentence is transferred by our Poet to this play from the Eunuch of Menander: and to this practice alludes the objection mentioned in the Prologue.

That Fables should not be contaminated.

DONATUS.

† My Soul hath her content so absolute.]

The passage in Shakespeare's Othello, from which I have borrowed this line, is a kind of contrast to this in our Author. Each of them are speeches of the highest joy and rapture, and each of them founded on the instability of human happiness; but in my mind the English Poet has the advantage.

— — — If I were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy; for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort, like to this,
Succeeds in unknown fate.

There is a passage in Otway's Orphan, which is, I think, a palpable imitation of a speech of Pamphilus, at the conclusion of the first act of this play. As it happened to be omitted in that place, I have subjoined it to this note; and if the reader will take the pains to turn back to page 29, he may compare the two speeches together.

Chamont. When our dear Parents died, they died together,
One fate surpriz'd them, and one grave receiv'd them:
My father with his dying breath bequeath'd
Her to my love: My mother, as she lay
Languishing by him, call'd me to her side,
Took me in her fainting arms, wept, and embrac'd me;
Then press'd me close, and as she observ'd my tears,
Kiss'd them away: Said she, Chamont, my son,
By this, and all the love I ever shew'd thee,
Be careful of Monimia, watch her youth,
Let not her wants betray her to dishonour.
Perhaps kind heav'n may raise some friend—then sigh'd,
Kiss'd me again; so blest us, and expir'd.

SCENE THE LAST.

Enter DAVUS.

Davus entering.] Where's Pamphilus?

Pam. Oh Davus!

Davus. Who's there?

Pam. I.

Davus. Oh Pamphilus!

Pam. You know not my good fortune.

Davus. Do you know my ill-fortune?

Pam. To a tittle.

Davus. 'Tis after the old fashion, that my ills
Should reach your ears, before your joys reach mine.

Pam. Glycerium has discover'd her relations.

Davus. Oh excellent!

Char. How's that? [listening.

Pam. Her father is
Our most near friend.

Davus. Who?

Pam. Chremes.

Davus. Charming news!

Pam. And I'm to marry her immediately.

Char. Is this man talking in his sleep, and dreams
On what he wishes waking? [listening.

Pa. And moreover,
For the child, Davus——

Davus. Ah, sir, say no more.
You're th' only fav'rite of the Gods.

Char. I'm made
If this be true. I'll speak to them. [comes forward.

Pam. Who's there?
Charinus! oh, well met.

Char. I give you joy.

Pam. You've heard then —

Char. Ev'ry word: and prithee now,
In your good fortune, think upon your friend.
Chremes is now your own; and will perform
Whatever you shall ask.

Pam. I shall remember.
'Twere tedious to expect his coming forth:
Along with me then to Glycerium!
Davus, do you go home, and hasten them
To fetch her hence. Away, away!

Davus I go. [Exeunt Pam. and Char.

[Davus addressing the audience.

Wait not till they come forth: Within

She'll

She'll be betroth'd, within, if ought remains
Undone, 'twill be concluded.—Clap your hands! *

* Clap your hands!] Plaudite. All the old Tragedies and Comedies acted at Rome concluded in this manner. Donec CANTOR vos PLAUDITE dicat, says Horace. Who the Cantor was is matter of dispute. Monf. Dacier thinks it was the whole Chorus; others suppose it to have been a single Actor; some the Prompter, and some the Composer.

Before the word Plaudite in all the old copies is an Ω , which has also given rise to several learned conjectures. It is most probable according to the notion of Madam Dacier, that this Ω , being the last Letter of the Greek Alphabet, was nothing more than the mark of the transcriber to signify the end, like the Latin word Finis in modern books: or it might, as Cook supposes, stand for $\Omega\delta\epsilon\varsigma$, Cantor, denoting that the following word Plaudite, was spoken by him.

CALLIOPIUS RECENSUI.] After Plaudite, in all the old copies of Terence, stand these two words: which signify, “I Calliopius have revised and corrected this piece.” And this proceeds from the custom of the old critics, who carefully revised all manuscripts: and when they had read and corrected any work, certified the same by placing their names at the end of it. DACIER.

Eunuch.

T H E

E U N U C H.

T H E E U N U C H ; *

Acted at the MEGALESIAN GAMES,

L. Postumius Albinus and L. Cornelius Merula, Curule Ædiles: Principal Actors, L. Ambivius Turpio and L. Attilius Prænestinus: The Musick, composed for Two Right-handed Flutes, by Flaccus, Freedman to Claudius: It is from the Greek of Menander. It was acted twice †, M. Valerius, and C. Fannius, Consuls ‡.

Year of Rome - - - - - 591

Before Christ - - - - - 159

* The Eunuch.] This seems to have been the most popular of all the Comedies of Terence. Suetonius and Donatus, both inform us that it was acted with the greatest applause, and that the Poet received a larger Price for it from the Ædiles, than had ever been paid for any before, viz. 8000 sesterces, which is about equal to 200 crowns, which in those times was a considerable sum.

† Acted twice.] Acta II. Donatus informs us it was acted a third time. It is certain therefore that there is something wanting in this title, and that we should read acta II. DIE, acted twice IN ONE DAY, of which fact we are made acquainted by Suetonius. DACIER.

‡ Baif, a Poet, who lived under Charles IX.

made a translation of the Eunuch into French Verse, which, if I am not deceived, was never publicly represented, as there was not at that time a company of Comedians regularly established at Paris. I have not heard that before, or since his time, we have any other poetical translations of Terence; and my Andrian is, I believe, the first of his Comedies, that has appeared on our stage. BARON.

Baron is partly mistaken. There is extant in the works of the celebrated Fontaine, a Comedy entitled L'Eunuque, being, like Baron's Andrian, founded on Terence, with such alterations, as the modern Poet thought advisable in his age and country. Some of the principal variations will be observed in the course of these notes.

TO THE
KING'S SCHOLARS

Of St. Peter's College, Westminster,

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS HUMBL Y INSCRIBED,

BY THEIR MOST HUMBLE SERVANT,

AND OLD SCHOOL-FELLOW,

GEORGE COLMAN.

P E R S O N S.

P R O L O G U E.

L A C H E S.

P H Æ D R I A.

C H Æ R E A.

A N T I P H O.

C H R E M E S.

T H R A S O.

G N A T H O.

P A R M E N O.

D O R U S.

S A N G A.

S I M A L I O, and other Mutes.

T H A I S.

P Y T H I A S.

D O R I A S.

S O P H R O N A.

S C E N E, A_TH E N S.

P R O L O G U E.

TO please the candid, give offence to none,
This, says the Poet, ever was his care:

* Yet if there's One, who thinks he's hardly censur'd,

Let him remember He was the Aggressor:

He, who translating many, but not well,

On good Greek fables fram'd poor Latin plays;

He, who but lately to the Publick gave

† The Phantom of Menander; He, who made,

‡ In the Thesaurus, the Defendant plead

* Yet if there's one, &c.] Meaning Lavinus, the Poet censured in the Prologue to the Andrian. DONATUS.

† The Phantom of Menander.] The Phantom [Φασμα] was the title of a Comedy of Menander; in which a young Man looking thro' a hole in the wall, which divides his father's house from a neighbour's, beholds a virgin of extraordinary beauty, and is affected with an awful reverence, as at the sight of a Divinity; from which the Play is called the Phantom. The Mother, (who had this child by a secret amour before her marriage with the young Man's father, and educated her privately in the house of the next door neighbour) is represented to have made the hole in the wall, and to have decked the passage with garlands, and green branches, that it might look like a consecrated place; whither she daily went to her devotions, and used to call forth her daughter to converse with her there. The Youth, coming by degrees to the knowledge of her being but a mortal, his passion for her becomes so violent, as to admit of no cure but marriage; which at last is accomplished to the great satisfaction of the Mother and Daughter, the joy of the Lover, and the consent of his Father.—This argument of the Phasma Bentley gives us; but to whom we are obliged for it says he does not know, whether to Donatus or some older scholiast. COOKE.

‡ In the Thesaurus.] In the Thesaurus, or Treasure, of Lavinus, a young fellow having squandered his estate, sends a servant ten years after his father's death, according to the will of the deceased, to carry provisions to his father's monument; but he had before sold the ground, in which the monument stood, to a covetous old man; to whom the servant applied to help him to open the monument; in which they discovered a hoard of gold and a letter. The old fellow seizes the Treasure, and keeps it, under pretence of having deposited it there, for safety, during times of war: the young fellow goes to law with him; and the old man is represented as opening the cause thus, "Athenians, why should I relate the war with the Rhodians? &c." which Terence ridicules, because the young man who was the Plaintiff, should first shew his own title to it.—

Thus

And vouch the question'd treasure to be his,
 Before the Plaintiff his own title shews,
 Or whence it came into his father's tomb.

Henceforward, let him not deceive himself,
 Or cry, "I'm safe, he can say nought of me."
 I charge him that he err not, and forbear
 To urge me farther; for I've more, much more,
 Which now shall be o'erlook'd, but shall be known,
 If he pursue his flanders, as before.

Soon as this Play, the Eunuch of Menander,
 Which we are now preparing to perform,
 Was purchas'd by the Ædiles, he obtain'd

* Leave to examine it: and afterwards

† When 'twas rehears'd before the Magistrates,
 "A Thief, he cried, no Poet gives this piece.

Thus far Bentley from the same scholiast. This note is a clear explanation of the passage to which it belongs. Hare concurs with Madam Dacier in her opinion, that this story of the Treasure was only an incident foisted by Lavinius into the Phantom of Menander, and not a distinct play: but was I not determined by the more learned Bentley, the Text itself would not permit me to concur in their opinion, as the words atque in Thesauro scripsit, seem plainly to be a transition to another play. COOKE.

Menander, and his Cotemporary Philemon, each of them wrote a Comedy under this title. We have in the above note the story of Menander's; and we know that of Philemon's from the Trinummus of Plautus, which was a translation of it.

* Leave to examine it.] Perfecit, sibi ut inspiciundi esset copia. The word inspiciundi certainly carries a stronger sense than merely to be present at the representation. The meaning of the whole passage I take to be this. That having obtained leave to peruse the M. S. he furnished himself with objections against the piece, which he threw out when it came to be represented before the Magistrates.

† When 'twas rehears'd before the Magistrates.] This is a remarkable passage, for it informs us that when the Magistrates had bought a piece, they had it represented at their own house, before it was played in publick. DACIER.

"Yet

“ Yet has he not deceived us: for we know,
 “ * The Colax is an antient Comedy
 “ Of Nævius, and of Plautus; and from thence
 “ The Parasite and Soldier both are stolen.”

If that's the Poet's crime, it is a crime
 Of ignorance, and not a studied theft.
 Judge for yourselves! the fact is even thus.
 The Colax is a fable of Menander's;
 Wherein is drawn the character of Colax
 The Parasite, and the Vain-Glorious Soldier:
 Which characters, he scruples not to own,
 He to his Eunuch from the Greek transferr'd:
 † But that he knew, those pieces were before
 Made Latin, That he stedfastly denies.

* The Colax, &c.] Colax is a Greek word [Κολαξ] signifying a flatterer, which was the reason the Greeks gave that name to their Parasites. DACIER.

† But that he knew, &c.] If Plautus wrote a play under the title of Colax, I should think it very unlikely for Terence not to have seen it, considering how soon he flourished after Plautus, his being engaged in the same studies, and his having such access to the libraries of the Great. Among the fragments of Plautus is one verse said to be a line of the Colax: yet I am inclined to believe Plautus never translated Menander's Colax. The character of the Vain-Glorious Soldier here mentioned I am apt to think the same with that which is the Hero of Plautus's Comedy now extant, and called Miles Gloriosus; from which Terence could not take his Thrafo. Pyrgopolinices and Thrafo are both full of themselves, both boast of their valour, and their intimacy with princes, and both fancy themselves beloved by all the women, who see them; and they are both played off by their Parasites; but they differ in their manners and their speech. Plautus's Pyrgopolinices is always in the clouds, and talking big, and of blood and wounds, like our heroes commonly called Derby Captains. Terence's Thrafo never says too little, nor too much, but is an easy ridiculous character, continually supplying the Audience with mirth, without the wild extravagant bluster of Pyrgopolinices. Plautus and Terence both took their Soldiers and Parasites from Menander, but gave them different dresses. COOKE.

Though there is much good criticism in the above note, it is certain that Plautus did not take

Yet if to other Poets 'tis not lawful
 To draw the characters, our fathers drew,
 How can it then be lawful to exhibit
 Slaves running to and fro; to represent
 Good matrons, wanton harlots; or to shew
 An eating parasite, vain-glorious foldier,
 Suppositious children, bubbled dotards,
 Or Love, or Hate, or Jealousy? — In short
 Nothing's said now, but has been said before.
 Weigh then these things with candour, and forgive
 The Moderns, if what Antients did, they do.

Attend, and list in silence to our play,
 That ye may know what 'tis the Eunuch means.

take his Miles Gloriosus from the Colax of Menander, as he himself informs us it was translated from a Greek Play called Αλαζων, the Boaster, and the Parasite is but a trifling character in that play, never appearing after the first scene.

T H E
E U N U C H.

. A C T I. S C E N E I.

Enter PHÆDRIA and PARMENO.

Phæd. * AND what then shall I do? not go? not now?
When she herself invites me? or were't best
Fashion my mind no longer to endure
These harlots' impudence?—Shut out! recall'd!
Shall I return? No, not if she implore me.

Par. Oh brave! oh excellent! if you maintain it!
But if you try, and can't go thro' with spirit,
And finding you can't bear it, uninvited,
Your peace unmade, all of your own accord,
You come and swear you love, and can't endure it,
Good night! all's over! ruin'd and undone!
She'll jilt you, when she sees you in her pow'r.

Phæd. You then, in time consider and advise!

* And what then, &c.] Phædria enters, as having deliberated a long time within himself and at last breaking out into these words. DONATUS.

Horace and Persius have both imitated this beautiful passage in their satires.

Par. Master! the thing which hath not in itself
 Or measure or advice, advice can't rule.
 In love are all these ills; suspicions, quarrels,
 Wrongs, reconcilements, war, and peace again:
 Things thus uncertain, if by reason's rules
 You'd certain make, it were as wise a task
 To try with reason to run mad. And now
 What you in anger meditate—I her? *
 That him?—that me? that would not—pardon me!
 I would die rather: No! she shall perceive
 How much I am a man.—Big words like these,
 She in good faith with one false tiny drop,
 Which, after grievous rubbing, from her eyes
 Can scarce perforce be squeez'd, shall overcome.
 Nay, she shall swear, 'twas you in fault, not she;
 You too shall own th' offence, and pray for pardon.

Phæd. Oh monstrous! monstrous! now indeed I see
 How false she is, and what a wretch I am!
 Spite of myself I love; and knowing, feeling,
 With open eyes run on to my destruction;
 And what to do I know not.

Par. What to do?

* I her?—that him?—that me?—that would not—] An abrupt manner of speaking familiar to persons in anger, for the sentences are to be understood thus. I go to her?—that receiv'd him?—that excluded me?—that would not let me in: for indignation loves to deal in the Elleipsis and Apophosis. DONATUS.

As the Pronouns in our language admit a variation

What should you do, Sir, but redeem yourself
As cheaply as you can? — at easy rates
If possible — if not — at any rate —
And never vex yourself.

Phæd. Is that your counsel?

Par. Ay, if you're wise; and do not add to love
More troubles than it has, and those it has Bear bravely! But she comes, our ruin comes;
For she, like storms of hail on fields of corn,
Beats down our hopes, and carries all before her.

S C E N E II.

Enter THAIS.

Thais. Ah me! I fear lest Phædria take offence,
And think I meant it other than I did,
That he was not admitted yesterday. [to herself not seeing them.]

Phæd. I tremble, Parmeno, and freeze with horror.

variation of Case, I saw no reason why I should not literally copy the beautiful egone illam? &c. of Terence.

* But she comes, our ruin comes: For she, &c.]
There is an extreme elegance in this passage in the original. There is much the same sentiment in the Cymbeline of Shakespeare: and I believe, upon a fair comparison between them, the learned reader will agree with me, that the passage in the English poet is not only equal, but even superior in beauty to that in Terence.

*Sed eccia ipse egreditur, nostri fundi calamitas.
Nam quod nos capere oportet, hæc interceptit.*

TER.

— — — — — comes in my father;
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the North,
Shakes all our buds from growing.

CYMBELINE, ACT I.

Q 2

Par.

Par. Be of good cheer! approach yon fire—he'll warm you.

Thais. Who's there? my Phædræia? Why did you stand here?
Why not directly enter?

Par. Not one word
Of having shut him out!

Thais. Why don't you speak?

Phæd. Because, forsooth, these doors will always fly
Open to me, or that because I stand
The first in your good graces. [ironically.

Thais. Nay, no more!

Phæd. No more?—O Thais, Thais, would to heaven
Our loves were parallel, that things like these Might torture you, as this has tortur'd me;
Or that your actions were indifferent to me!

Thais. Grieve not, I beg, my love, my Phædræia!
Not that I lov'd another more, I did this.
But I by circumstance was forc'd to do it.

Par. So then, it seems, for very love, poor soul,
You shut the door in's teeth.

Thais. Ah, Parmeno!
Is't thus you deal with me? Go to!—But hear
Why I did call you hither?

Phæd. Be it so.

Thais. But tell me first, can yon slave hold his peace?

Par.

Par. I? oh most faithfully: But hark ye, madam!
 On this condition do I bind my faith:
 The truths I hear, I will conceal; whate'er
 Is false, or vain, or feign'd, I'll publish it.
 I'm full of chinks, and run through here and there:
 So if you claim my secrecy, speak truth.

Thais. My mother was a Samian, liv'd at Rhodes.*

Par. This sleeps in silence. [archly.

Thais. There a certain merchant
 Made her a present of a little girl,
 Stol'n hence from Attica.

Phæd. A citizen?

Thais. I think so, but we cannot tell for certain:
 Her father's and her mother's name she told
 Herself; her country, and the other marks
 Of her original, she neither knew,
 Nor, from her age, was't possible she should.
 The merchant added further, that the pirates,
 Of whom he bought her, let him understand,
 She had been stol'n from Sunium. My mother
 Gave her an education, brought her up

* My mother was a Samian, liv'd at Rhodes.
 An indirect and tender manner of acknowledging her mother to be a courtesan, by saying she was a native of one place, and lived in another. For this reason courtezans were called strangers; and on this circumstance depends the archness and malice of Parmeno's answer.

DONATUS.

In all respects as she had been her own;
And she in gen'ral was suppos'd my sister.
I journied hither with the gentleman
To whom alone I was connected then,
The same who left me all I have.

Par. Both these
Are false, and shall go forth at large.

Thais. Why so?

Par. Because nor you with one could be content,
Nor he alone enrich'd you; for my master
Made good and large addition.

Thais. I allow it.
But let me hasten to the point I wish.
Meantime the Captain, who was then but young
In his attachment to me, went to Caria.
I, in his absence, was addrest by you;
Since when, full well you know, how very dear
I've held you, and have trusted you with all
My nearest counsels.

Phæd. And yet Parmeno
Will not be silent even here.

Par. Oh, Sir,
Is that a doubt?

Thais. Nay, prithee now, attend!

My mother's lately dead at Rhodes: her brother
Too much intent on wealth, no sooner saw
This virgin, handsome, well-accomplisht, skill'd
In musick, than, spurr'd on by hopes of gain,
In publick market he expos'd and sold her.
It so fell out, my soldier-spark was there,
And bought her, all unknowing these events;
To give to me: but soon as he return'd,
And found how much I was attach'd to you,
He feign'd excuses to keep back the girl;
Pretending, were he thoroughly convinc'd
That I would still prefer him to yourself,
Nor fear'd that when I had receiv'd the girl,
I would abandon him, he'd give her to me;
But that he doubted. For my part, I think
He is grown fond of her himself.

Phæd. Is there

Aught more between them?

Thais. No; for I've enquir'd.

And now, my Phædria, there are fundry causes
Wherefore I wish to win the virgin from him.
First, for she's call'd my sister: and moreover,
That I to her relations may restore her.
I'm a lone woman, have nor friend, nor kin:

Wherefore

Wherefore, my Phædria, I would raise up friends
By some good turn:—And you, I prithee now,
Help me to do it. Let him some few days
Be my gallant in chief. What! no reply?

Phæd. Abandon'd woman! can I aught reply
To deeds like these?

Par. Oh excellent! well said!

He feels at length: Now, master, you're a man.

Phæd. I saw your story's drift.—A little girl
Stol'n hence—My mother brought her up—was call'd
My sister—I would fain obtain her from him,
That I to her relations might restore her—
All this preamble comes at last to this.
I am excluded, he's admitted. Why?
But that you love him more than me, and fear
Left this young captive win your hero from you.

Thais. Do I fear that?

Phæd. Why, prithee now, what else?
Does He bring gifts alone? did'st e'er perceive
My bounty shut against you? Did I not Because you told me you'd be glad to have
An Æthiopian servant-maid, all else
Omitted, seek one out? You said besides,
You wish'd to have an Eunuch, 'cause forsooth,

They

They were for dames of quality. I found one,
For both I yesterday paid twenty minæ.^{*}
Yet you condemn me—I forgot not these,
And for these I'm despis'd.

Thais. Why this, my Phædria?
Tho' I would fain obtain the girl, and tho'
I think by these means it might well be done;
Yet, rather than make you my enemy,
I'll do as you command.

Phæd. Oh, had you said
Those words sincerely. “Rather than make you
“My enemy!”—Oh, could I think those words
Came from your heart, what is't, I'd not endure!

Par. Gone! conquer'd with one word! alas, how soon!

Thais. Not speak sincerely? from my very foul?
What did you ever ask, altho' in sport,
But you obtain'd it of me? yet I can't
Prevail on you to grant but two short days.

Phæd. Well—for two days—so those two be not twenty.

Thais. No in good faith but two, or—

Phæd. Or? no more.

Thais. It shall not be: but you will grant me those.

^{*} Twenty Minæ.] Equal to 64*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* of our money. COOKE.

Phæd. Your will must be a law.

Thais. Thanks, my sweet Phædria!

Phæd. I'll to the Country: there consume myself
For these two days: it must be so: we must Give way to Thais.—See you, Parmeno,
The slaves brought hither.

Par. Sir, I will.

Phæd. My Thais,
For these two days, farewell!

Thais. Farewell, my Phædria!
Would you ought else with me?

Phæd. Ought else, my Thais?

* Be with yon foldier present, as if absent:
All night and day love me: still long for me:
Dream, ponder still of me; wish, hope for me;
Delight in me; be all in all with me;
Give your whole heart, for mine's all your's, to me. [Exeunt.

* Be with yon foldier, &c.] Phædria's request to his mistress, upon leaving her for two days, is inimitably beautiful and natural.

ADDISON'S Spectator, N^o. 170.

Imogen in the speech above cited from Shakespeare, expresses her intention to have said much the same kind of things on parting with Posthumus. As both the passages are extremely beautiful, it may not be disagreeable to the reader to compare them together.

I did not take my leave of him, but had

Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such; or, I could make him swear,

The shees of Italy should not betray Mine int'rest, and his honour; or have charg'd him

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,

To encounter me with orisons; for then
I am in heaven with him, &c.

S C E N E

SCENE III.

Manet THAIS.*

Ah me! I fear that he believes me not,
 And judges of my heart from those of others.†
 I in my conscience know, that nothing false
 I have deliver'd, nor to my true heart
 Is any dearer than this Phædria:
 And whatfoe'er in this affair I've done,
 For the girl's sake I've done: for I'm in hopes
 I know her brother, a right noble youth.
 To day I wait him, by his own appointment;
 Wherefore I'll in, and tarry for his coming.

* Manet Thais.] The poet very judiciously reserves part of the argument to be told here, which Thais did not relate to Phædria, because Parmeno was present: whom the poet keeps in ignorance, that he may with probability dare to assist Chærea in his attempt on the virgin. DONATUS.

† And judges of my heart from those of others. Here Terence shews it to be his peculiar excellence to introduce common characters in a new manner, without departing from custom or nature: Since he draws a good courtesan, and yet engages and delights the spectator. DONATUS.

Under the name of Thais, Menander is supposed to have drawn the character of his own mistress, Glycere; and, it seems, he introduced a courtesan of the same name into several of his comedies. One comedy was entitled Thais, from which St. Paul took the sentence in his Epistle to the Corinthians. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Plutarch has also preserved four lines of the prologue to that comedy, in which the poet, in a kind of mock heroick manner invokes the muse, to teach him to draw the character of his heroine.

Ἐμοὶ μὲν ἐν αἰδέ τοιαύτην, θεᾶ,
 Θρασύαν, ὤρσαι δὲ καὶ πιδανὴν ἀμα,
 Ἀδικῆσαν, ἀποκλείουσαν, αἰῆσαν πυκνά,
 Μηδενὸς ὀρώσαν, προσποιώμενην δ' αἰ.

PLUT. de Audiend. Poet.

Such therefore sing, O Goddess! Bold, but fair,
 And blest with all the arts of fond persuasion;
 Injurious, quarrellous, for ever craving,
 Caring for none, but feigning love to all.

The word ἀποκλείουσαν alludes particularly to the shutting out her lovers, the very injury offered to Phædria in this play.

Fontaine, 'probably for the same reasons that induced Baron to vary from his original, represents Thais as a young widow, instead of a courtesan.

A C T II. S C E N E I.

PHÆDRIA, PARMENO.

Phædria. CARRY the slaves according to my order*.
Par. I will.

Phæd. But diligently.

Par. Sir, I will.

Phæd. But soon.

Par. I will, Sir!

Phæd. Say, is it sufficient?

Par. Ah! what a question's that? as if it were
 So difficult! I wish, Sir Phædria,
 You could gain aught so easy, as lose these.

Phæd. I lose, what's dearer yet, my comfort with them.
 Repine not at my gifts.

Par. Not I: moreover
 I will convey them straight. But have you any Other commands?

Phæd. Oh yes: Set off our presents

* Carry the Slaves, &c.] This Scene contains a deal of lover's impertinence and idle talk, repeating what has been said before; and that too much over and over again, and in a tiresome manner. DONATUS.

If the Critic meant this note for a censure, it is in fact rather a commendation.

With words as handsome as you can; and drive,
As much as possible, that rival from her!

Par. Ah, Sir! I should, of course, remember that.

Phæd. I'll to the country, and stay there.

Par. O, ay! [ironically.]

Phæd. But hark you!

Par. Sir, your pleasure?

Phæd. Do you think

I can with constancy hold out, and not Return before my time?

Par. Hold out? Not you.

Either you'll straight return, or soon at night
Your dreams will drive you out o' doors.

Phæd. I'll toil;

That, weary, I may sleep against my will.

Par. Weary you may be; but you'll never sleep.

Phæd. Ah, Parmeno, you wrong me. I'll cast out
This treacherous softness from my soul, nor thus Indulge my passions. Yes, I could remain,
If need, without her even three whole days,

Par. * Hui! three whole livelong days! consider, Sir.

Phæd. I am resolved.

* Hui! three whole days!] Hui! UNIVORSUM triduum!—Crites. To read Macrobius, explaining the propriety and elegance of many words in Virgil, which I had before passed over without consideration, as common things, is enough to assure me that I ought to think the same of Terence; and that in the purity of his style, (which Tully so much valued, that he ever carried

PARMENO alone.

* Heav'ns, what a strange disease is this! that love
 Should so change men, that one can hardly swear
 They are the same!—No mortal liv'd
 Less weak, more grave, more temperate than he.
 —But who comes yonder? — Gnatho, as I live;
 The Captain's parasite! and brings along
 The Virgin for a present: oh rare wench!
 † How beautiful! I shall come off, I doubt,
 But scurvily with my decrepid Eunuch.
 This Girl surpasses ev'n Thais herself.

carried his works about him) there is yet left in him great room for admiration, if I knew but where to place it.

Eugenius. I should have been led to a consideration of the wit of the ancients, had not Crites given me sufficient warning not to be too bold in my judgment of it; because the languages being dead, and many of the customs, and little accidents, on which it depended, lost to us, we are not competent judges of it. But though I grant, that here and there we may miss the application of a proverb or a custom, yet a thing well said will be wit in all languages; and though it may lose something in the translation, yet to him who reads it in the original, it is still the same. He has an idea of its excellence, though it cannot pass from his mind into any other expression or words than those in which he finds it. When Phædria in the Eunuch had a command from his mistress to be absent two days, and encouraging himself to go through with it, said, Tandem ego, non illa caream, si opus sit, vel totum triduum? Parmeno, to mock the softness of his master, lifting up his hands and eyes, cries out, as it were in admiration, Hui! univorsum triduum! the elegancy of which univorsum, though it cannot be rendered in our language, yet leaves an impression on our souls. But this happens seldom in him, in Plautus oftener; who is infinitely too bold in his metaphors, and coining words; out of which many times his wit is nothing.

DRYDEN'S Essay of Dramatic Poesie.

* Heav'ns, what a strange, &c.] Part of Benedict's soliloquy in the second act of Much ado about Nothing is much in the same vein with this of Parmeno; only that it is heightened by the circumstance of its being immediately previous to his falling in love himself.

† How beautiful, &c.] The Poet makes Parmeno take notice of her extraordinary beauty, in order to make the violence of Chærea's passion for her the more probable. DONATUS.

SCENE

SCENE II.

* Enter GNATHO; PARMENO behind.

† Gnat. Good heav'ns! how much one man excels another!
 What diff'rence 'twixt a wise man and a fool!
 What just now happen'd proves it: Coming hither
 I met with an old countryman, a man
 Of my own place and order, like myself,
 No scurvy fellow, who, like me had spent
 In mirth and jollity his whole estate.

* Enter Gnatho.] These characters, the Parasite and the Soldier, as the Poet himself confesses, are not in the Eunuch of Menander, but taken from the Colax. DONATUS.

Two actions, equally laboured and driven on by the writer, would destroy the unity of the poem; it would be no longer one play, but two: Not but that there may be many actions in a play, as Ben Jonson has observed in his Discoveries, but they must be all subservient to the great one, which our language happily expresses in the name of under-plots: Such as in Terence's Eunuch is the difference and reconciliation of Thais and Phædria, which is not the chief business of the play, but promotes the marriage of Chærea and Chremes's sister, principally intended by the poet. There ought to be but one action, says Corneille, that is, one complete action, which leaves the mind of the audience in a full repose; but this cannot be brought to pass, but by many other imperfect actions which conduce to it, and hold the audience in a delightful suspense of what will be.

DRYDEN's Essay of Dramatic Poesie.

Instead of the quarrels of Thais and Phædria, which were most probably in the Eunuch of Menander, it would have been better to have instanced the characters taken from the Colax; which Terence has very artfully connected with the rest of the fable, by representing the Girl, loved by Chærea, as given to Thais by Thraso, which produces the absence of Phædria, leaves room for the comical imposture of Chærea, and, although adscititious, becomes the main spring of the whole action.

† Good Heavens! &c.] This is the only scene in Terence, which I remember, that can be charged with being superfluous. Thraso has made a present to Thais of a young Girl. Gnatho is to carry her. Going along with her, he amuses himself with giving the Spectator a most agreeable eulogium on his profession. But was that the time for it? Let Gnatho pay due attention on the stage to the young woman whom he is charged with, and let him say what he will to himself, I consent to it. DIDEROT.

He

He was in a most wretched trim; his looks
 Lean, sick, and dirty; and his cloaths, all rags.
 How now! cry'd I, what means this figure, friend?
 Alas, says he, my patrimony's gone.
 — Ah, how am I reduc'd! my old acquaintance
 And friends all shun me. — Hearing this, how cheap
 I held him in comparison with me!
 Why, how now? wretch, said I, most idle wretch!
 Have you spent all, nor left ev'n hope behind?
 What! have you lost your sense with your estate?
 Me! — look on me — come from the same condition!
 How sleek! how neat! how clad! in what good case?
 I've ev'ry thing, though nothing; nought possess,
 Yet nought I ever want. — Ah, Sir, but I
 Have an unhappy temper, and can't bear
 To be the butt of others, or to take
 A beating now and then. — How then! d'ye think
 Those are the means of thriving? No, my friend!
 Such formerly indeed might drive a trade:
 * But mine's a new profession; I the first

* But mine's a new profession, &c.] Though the Vain Man and the Flatterer were characters in great measure dependant on each other, and therefore commonly shewn together, yet it is most probable, that in the Colax of Menander, from whence Gnatho and Thrafo were taken by our author, the Parasite was the chief character, as in the Αλαζων, or the Boaster, the Greek Comedy from which Plautus took his Miles Gloriosus, the Braggadochio Captain was most probably the principal. But this I think is not all: for in the present instance the Poet seems to have intended to introduce a new sort of Parasite, never seen upon the stage before;

 the

That ever struck into this road. There are
A kind of men, who wish to be the head
Of ev'ry thing; but are not. These I follow;
Not for their sport and laughter, but for gain
To laugh with them, and wonder at their parts:
Whate'er they say, I praise it; if again
They contradict, I praise that too: Does any Deny? I too deny: Affirm? I too
Affirm: and in a word I've brought myself
To say, unsay, swear, and forswear, at pleasure:
And that is now the best of all professions.

Par. A special fellow this! who drives fools mad.

Gnat. Deep in this conversation, we at length the master of a more delicate manner of adulation than ordinary flatterers; and supporting his consequence with his patron at the same time that he lives upon him, and laughs at him. Comedendo & deridendo. Gnatho's acquaintance describes the old school of Parasites, which gives him occasion to shew in his turn, the superior excellence of the new sect, of which he is himself the founder. The first of these, as Madam Dacier observes justly, was the exact definition of a Parasite, who is described on almost every occasion by Plautus, as a fellow beaten, kicked, and cuffed at pleasure.

*Et hic quidem, hercle, nisi qui colophos perpeti
Potis Parasitus, frangique aulas in caput,
Vel ire extra portam trigeminam ad saccum licet.*

CAPTEIVEI, ACT I.

And here the Parasite, unless he can
Bear blows, and have pots broken on his scone,

Without the city-gate may beg his bread.

Gnatho, on the contrary, by his artful adulation, contrives to be caressed instead of ill-treated. Had the Colax of Plautus at least remained to us, we should perhaps have seen the specifick difference between Him and other Parasites more at large. In the Eunuch Gnatho is but episodical; but if this manner of considering his character be not too refined, it accounts for the long speech, so obnoxious to Diderot, with which he introduces himself to the audience; throws a new light on all he says and does; and is a strong proof of the excellence of Menander in drawing characters. However this may be, it is certain that Gnatho is one of the most agreeable Parasites in any play, antient or modern, except the incomparable Falstaff.

Come to the Market, where the sev'ral tradesmen,
 Butchers, cooks, grocers, poult'ers, fishmongers,
 (Who once did profit, and still profit by me)
 All run with joy to me, salute, invite,
 And bid me welcome. He, poor half-starv'd wretch,
 Soon as he saw me thus carest, and found
 I got my bread so easily, desired
 He might have leave to learn that art of me.
 I bad him follow me, if possible :
 And, as the Schools of the Philosophers
 Have ta'en from the Philosophers their names,
 So, in like manner, let all Parasites
 Be call'd from me Gnathonicks !

Par. Mark, what ease,
 And being kept at other's cost produces !
Gnat. But hold, I must convey this girl to Thais,
 And bid her forth to sup.—Ha, Parmeno !
 Our rival's slave, standing at Thais' door !
 —How melancholy he appears ! All's safe :
 These poor rogues find but a cold welcome here.
 I'll play upon this Knave. [aside.

Par. These fellows think
 This present will make Thais all their own. [aside.

Gnat. To Parmeno, his lov'd and honour'd friend,

Gnatho

Gnatho fends greeting. [ironically.]—What are you upon?*

Par. My Legs.

Gnat. I see it.—Is there nothing here
Displeasing to you?

Par. You.

Gnat. I do believe it.
But prithee, is there nothing else?

Par. Wherefore?

Gnat. Because you're melancholy.

Par. Not at all.

Gnat. Well, do not be so!—Pray, now, what d'ye think
Of this young handmaid?

Par. Troth, she's not amiss.

Gnat. I plague the rascal. [half-aside.

Par. How the knave's deceiv'd! [half-aside.

Gnat. Will not this gift be very acceptable
To Thais, think you?

Par. You'd insinuate
That we're shut out.—There is, alas, a change
In all things.

Gnat. For these fix months, Parmeno,

* What are you upon?—My Legs.] Quid agitur?—Statur. A mere play upon words, which is also in the Pseudolus of Plautus. There is much the same kind of conceit with the present in the Merry Wives of Windsor.

Falstaff. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am About.

Pistol. Two Yards and more.

For fix whole months at least, I'll make you easy;
You shan't run up and down, and watch till day-light;
Come, don't I make you happy?

Par. Very happy.

Gnat. 'Tis my way with my friends.

Par. You're very good.

Gnat. But I detain you: you, perhaps, was going Somewhere else.

Par. No where.

Gnat. May I beg you then
To use your int'rest here, and introduce me
To Thais?

Par. Hence! away! these doors
Fly open now, because you carry her.

Gnat. Wou'd you have any one call'd forth? [Exit.

Par. Well, well!

Pafs but two days; and you, so welcome now,
That the doors open with your little finger,
Shall kick against them then, I warrant you,
Till your heels ache again.

Re-Enter G N A T H O.

Gnat. Ha! Parmeno!
Are you here still? What! are you left a Spy,

Left

Left any Go-between should run by stealth
To Thais from the Captain? [Exit.

Par. Very smart!

No wonder such a wit delights the captain!
But hold! I see my master's younger son Coming this way. I wonder much he should Desert Piræus,* where he's now on guard.
'Tis not for nothing. All in haste he comes,
And seems to look about.

S C E N E III.

Enter CHÆREA. PARMENO behind.

Chær. Undone! Undone!

The Girl is lost; I know not where she is,
Nor where I am: Ah, whither shall I trace?
Where seek? of whom enquire? or which way turn?
I'm all uncertain; but have one hope still:
Where'er she is, she cannot long lie hid.
O charming face! all others from my memory
Hence I blot out. † Away with common beauties!

* Desert Piræus.] Piræus, as well as Sunium, was a maritime town of Attica, with a port, where the Athenian youth were placed on guard, to watch against the incursions of Pirates, or other enemies. DONATUS.

tidianarum harum formarum. It is impossible to translate this passage without losing much of its elegance, which consists in the three words ending in arum, which are admirably adapted to express disgust, and make us even feel that sensation. DACIER.

† Away with common beauties!] Tædet quo-

Par.

Par. So, here's the other! and he mutters too
I know not what of love. O what a poor Unfortunate old man their father is!
As for this stripling, if he once begin,
His brother's is but jest and children's play
To his mad fury.

Chær. Twice ten thousand curses
Seize the old wretch, who kept me back to-day;
And me for staying! with a fellow too
I did not care a farthing for! — But see!
Yonder stands Parmeno. — Good day!

Par. How now?
Wherefore so sad? and why this hurry, Chærea?
Whence come you?

Chær. I? I cannot tell, i'faith,
Whence I am come, or whither I am going,
I've so entirely lost myself.

Par. And why?

Chær. I am in Love.

Par. Oh brave!

Chær. Now, Parmeno,
Now you may shew what kind of man you are.
You know you've often told me; Chærea,
Find something out to set your heart upon,

And

And mark how I will serve you ! yes, you know
 You've often said so, when I scap'd together
 All the provisions for you at my father's.

Par. Away, you trifler !

Chær. Nay, in faith, it's true :

Now make your promise good ! and in a cause
 Worthy the utmost reachings of your soul :
 A girl ! my Parmeno, not like our misses ;
 Whose mothers try to keep their shoulders down,
 And bind their bosoms, that their shapes may seem Genteel and slim. Is a girl rather plump ?

* They call her Nurse, and stint her in her food :
 Thus art, in spite of nature, makes them all
 Mere bulrushes : and therefore they're belov'd.

Par. And what's this girl of your's ?

Chær. A miracle.

Par. Oh, to be sure !

Chær. True, natural red and white ;
 Her body firm, and full of precious stuff !

Par. Her age ?

Chær. About sixteen.

Par. The very prime !

* They call her Nurse] Pugilem esse aiunt. Literally, they call her Boxer. The learned, I hope, will pardon, and the Ladies approve my softening this passage.

Chær.

Chær. This girl, by force, by stealth, or by intreaty,
Procure me! how I care not, so I have her.

Par. Well, whom does she belong to?

Chær. I don't know.

Par. Whence comes she?

Chær. I can't tell.

Par. Where does she live?

Chær. I can't tell neither.

Par. Where was it you saw her?

Chær. Here in the street.

Par. And how was it you lost her?

Chær. Why, it was that, which I so fum'd about,
As I came hither! nor was ever man
So jilted by good fortune, as myself.

Par. What mischief now?

Chær. Confounded luck!

Par. How so?

Chær. How so! d'ye know one Archidemides,
My father's kinsman, and about his age?

Par. Full well.

Chær. As I was in pursuit of her
He met me.

Par. Rather inconveniently.

Chær. Oh most unhappily! for other ills

May be told, Parmeno! — I could fwear too,
For fix, nay seven months, I had not seen him,
Till now, when leaft I wifh'd and moft would fhun it.
Is not this monftrous? Eh!

Par. Oh! very monftrous.

Chær. Soon as from far he faw me, instantly,
Bent, trembling, drop-jaw'd, gasping, out of breath,
He hobbled up to me. — Holo! ho! Chærea! —
I ftopt. — D'ye know what I want with you? — What?
— I have a caufe to-morrow. — Well! what then? —
— Fail not to tell your father, he remember
To go up with me, as an advocate*. —
His prating took fome time. — Ought elfe? faid I.
Nothing, faid he: — Away flew I, and faw
The girl that infant turn into this ftreet.

Par. Sure he muft mean the virgin, juft now brought To Thais for a prefent.

Chær. Soon as I
Came hither, fhe was out of fight.

Par. Had fhe
Any attendants?

* As an Advocate.] The word, Advocate, Advocatus, did not bear the fame fenfe then as it does with us at prefent. The Advocates, Advocati, were friends that accompanied thofe who had caufes, either to do them honour, or to appear as witneffes, or to render them fome other fervice. DACIER.

Chær. Yes; a parasite,
With a maid-servant.

Par. 'Tis the very same :
Away! have done! all's over*.

Chær. What d'ye mean?

Par. The Girl I mean.

Chær. D'ye know then who she is?
Tell me!—or have you seen her?

Par. Yes, I've seen her;
I know her; and can tell you where she is.

Chær. How! my dear Parmeno, d'ye know her?

Par. Yes.

Chær. And where she is, d'ye know?

Par. Yes, —there she is; [pointing.
Carried to Madam Thais for a present.

Chær. What monarch could bestow a gift so precious?

Par. The mighty Captain Thraſo, Phædria's rival.

Chær. Alas, poor brother!

Par. Ay, and if you knew
The gift he sends to be compar'd with this,
You'd cry Alas, indeed!

Chær. What is his gift? †

* All's over.] Jam conclamatum est. A metaphor taken from the Funeral Ceremonies of the Ancients.

† What is his gift.] Observe with what address Terence proceeds to the main part of his argument: the Eunuch being casually mentioned

Par. An Eunuch.

Chær. What! that old and ugly slave,
That he bought yesterday?

Par. The very same.

Chær. Why, surely, he'll be trundled out o'doors
He and his gift together—I ne'er knew
Till now that Thais was our neighbour.

Par. She
Has not been long so.

Chær. Ev'ry way unlucky!
Ne'er to have seen her neither!—Prithee, tell me,
Is she so handsome, as she's said to be? *

Par. Yes faith!

Chær. But nothing to compare to mine.

Par. Oh, quite another thing.

Chær. But Parmeno!
Contrive that I may have her.

Par. Well, I will.
Depend on my assistance:—have you any Further commands? [as if going.] mentioned suggests, as it were of course, the stratagem of imposing Chærea upon the family of Thais for him. DONATUS.

* Is she so handsome, as she's said to be?]
Another instance of the art of Terence, in preserving the probability of Chærea's being received for the Eunuch. He was such a stranger to the family, that he himself did not even know the person of Thais. It is added further, that she has not lived long in the neighbourhood, and the young fellow has been chiefly at Piræus. DONATUS.

Chær. Where are you going ?

Par. Home ;

To bring, according to your brother's order,
The slaves to Thais.

Chær. Oh, that happy Eunuch !
To be convey'd into that house !

Par. Why so ?

Chær. Why so ? why, he shall have that charming Girl
His fellow-servant, see her, speak with her,
Be with her in the same house all day long,
And sometimes eat, and sometimes sleep by her.

Par. And what if You should be so happy ?

Chær. How ?

Tell me, dear ~~Parmeno~~ !

Par. Assume his dress.

Chær. His dress ! what then ?

Par. I'll carry you for him.

Chær. I hear you.

Par. I will say that you are he.

Chær. I understand you.

Par. So shall you enjoy
Those blessings, which but now you envied him :
Eat with her, be with her, touch, toy with her,
And sleep by her : since none of Thais' maids

Know

Know you, or dream of what you are. Besides
Your figure, and your age are such, that you
May well pass for an Eunuch.

Chær. Oh, well said !

I ne'er heard better counsel. Come, let's in !
Dress me, and carry me ! Away, make haste !

Par. What are you at ? I did but jest.

Chær. You trifle.

Par. I'm ruin'd : Fool, what have I done ?—Nay whither
D'y'e push me thus ? you'll throw me down. Nay, stay !

Chær. Away.

Par. Nay prithee !

Chær. I'm resolv'd.

Par. Consider ;

You carry this too far.

Chær. No, not at all.

Give way !

Par. And Parmeno must pay for all. *

Ah, we do wrong !

Chær. Is it then wrong, for me †

* And Parmeno must pay for all.] Istæc in me cudetur faba. Literally, the Bean will be threshed on me. A Proverb taken from the countrymen's threshing Beans ; or from the cooks dressing them, who when they had not moistened them enough, but left them hard and tough, were sure to have them thrown at their heads. DONATUS.

The commentators give us several other interpretations of this proverb.

† Is it then wrong.] Here Terence obliquely defends the subject of the piece. DONATUS.

To be convey'd into a house of harlots,
And turn those very arts on them, with which
They hamper us, and turn our youth to scorn?
Can it be wrong for me too, in my turn,
To deceive them, by whom we're all deceiv'd?
No, rather let it be! 'tis just to play
This trick upon them : which, if greybeards know,
They'll blame indeed, but all will think well done.

Par. Well, if you must, you must; but do not then,
After all's over, throw the blame on me.

Chær. No, no !

Par. But do you order me ?

Chær. I do :

Order, command, force.

Par. Oh, I'll not dispute
Your pow'r. So, follow me.

Chær. Heav'n speed the plough !

ACT III. SCENE I.

Enter THRASO, and GNATHO.

Thraso. AND Thais then returns me many thanks?
Gnat. Ten thousand.

Thra. Say, is she delighted with it?

Gnat. Not so much with the gift itself, as that
By you 'twas given: But therein she triumphs.

Enter PARMENO behind.

Par. I'm come to look about me, and observe
A proper opportunity to bring
My presents. But behold the Captain!

Thra. 'Tis
Something, I know not how, peculiar to me,
That all I do's agreeable.

Gnat. In truth
I have observ'd it.

Thra. E'en the King always Held himself much obliged, whate'er I did:
Not so to others.

Gnat.

Gnat. Men of wit, like you,
The glory, got by others' care and toil,
Often transfer unto themselves.

Tbra. You've hit it.

Gnat. The king then held you——

Tbra. Certainly.

Gnat. Most dear.

Tbra. Most near. He trusted his whole army to me,
His counsels. ——

Gnat. Wonderful !

Tbra. And then, whene'er
Satiety of company, or hate
Of business seiz'd him——when he would repose——
As if——you understand me.

Gnat. Perfectly.
When he wou'd—in a manner——clear his stomach
Of all uneasiness.

Tbra. The very thing.
On such occasions he chose none but me.

Gnat. Hui ! there's a king indeed ! a king of taste !

Tbra. One of a thousand.

Gnat. Of a million sure !
——If he could live with you. [aside.

Tbra. The courtiers all

Began to envy me, and rail'd in secret :
 I car'd not; whence their spleen increas'd the more.
 One in particular, who had the charge
 Of th' Indian elephants; who grew at last
 So very troublesome, " I prithee, Strato,
 " Are you so savage, and so fierce, (says I)
 " Because you're governor of the wild beasts?"

Gnat. Oh, finely said! and shrewdly! Excellent!
 Too hard upon him! — what said He to't?

Thra. Nothing.

Gnat. And how the devil should he?

Par. Gracious heav'n!

The stupid coxcomb! — and that rascal too! [aside.

Thra. Ay! but the story of the Rhodian, Gnatho!
 How smart I was upon him at a feast —
 Did I ne'er tell you?

Gnat. Never: but pray do!
 — I've heard it o'er and o'er a thousand times. [aside.

Thra. We were by chance together at a feast —
 This Rhodian, that I told you of, and I. —
 I, as it happen'd, had a wench: The spark
 Began to toy with her, and laugh at me.
 " Why how now, Impudence! (said I) are You
 " A hare yourself, and yet would hunt for game?"

Gnat. Ha! ha! ha!

Thra. What's the matter?

Gnat. Ha! ha! ha!

Witty! smart! excellent! incomparable!

Is it your own? I swear I thought 'twas old.

Thra. Why did you ever hear it?

Gnat. Very often;

And reckon'd admirable.

Thra. 'Tis my own.

Gnat. And yet 'twas pity to be so severe
On a young fellow, and a gentleman.

Par. Ah! devil take you! [aside.

Gnat. What became of him?

Thra. It did for him. The company were all Ready to die with laughing:—in a word
They dreaded me.

Gnat. No wonder.

Thra. Harkye, Gnatho!

Thais, you know, suspects I love this Girl.
Shall I acquit myself?

Gnat. On no account.
Rather increase her jealousy.

Thra. And why?

Gnat. Why?—do you ask?—as if you didn't know!—

Whene'er

Whene'er she mentions Phædria, or whene'er
She praises him, to vex you ——

Thra. I perceive.

Gnat. To hinder that, you've only this resource.
When she names Phædria, name you Pamphila.
If she should say, come! let's have Phædria
To dinner with us! — ay, and Pamphila
To sing to us! — if she praise Phædria's person,
Praise you the Girl's! so give her tit for tat,
And gall Her in her turn.

Thra. Suppose she lov'd me,
This might avail me, Gnatho!

Gnat. While she loves
The presents which you give, expecting more,
So long she loves you; and so long you may
Have pow'r to vex her. She will always fear
To make you angry, lest some other reap
The harvest, which she now enjoys alone.

Thra. You're right: and yet I never thought of it.

Gnat. Ridiculous! because you did not turn
Your thoughts that way; or with how much more ease
Wou'd you have hit on this device yourself!

* SCENE II.

Enter THAIS, and PYTHIAS.

Thais. I thought I heard the Captain's voice : and see !
Good-day, my Thrafo !

Thra. Oh my Thais, welcome !
How does my sweeting ? — are you fond of me
For sending you that mufick-girl ?

Par. Oh brave !
He sets out nobly !

Thais. For your worth I love you.

Gnat. Come, let's to supper ! why do you delay ?

Par. Mark t'other ! he's a chip of the old block. †

Thais. I'm ready when you please.

Par. I'll up to her,
And seem as if but now come forth. — Ha ! Thais,
Where are you gadding ?

* Scene second.] Several persons of the play are concerned in this scene, and yet, by the art and excellence of the Poet, there arises no confusion of dialogue; each speech being admirably adapted to the character to which it is appropriated. DONATUS.

† A Chip of the old Block.] Ex homine hunc natum dicas. There has been much dispute about the meaning of these words. The old familiar expression, which I have made use of, is, I think, agreeable to the obvious and natural meaning of them. That Dryden understood them in this sense is evident from the following passage.

“ In the New Comedy of the Græcians, the Poets sought indeed to express the νθος, as in their Tragedies the παιδες, of mankind. But this contained only the general characters of men and manners ; that is, one old man or father, one lover, one courtesan, so like another as if the first of them had begot the rest of every sort. Ex homine hunc natum dicas.

Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

Thais.

Thais. Well met, Parmeno !

I was just going —

Par. Whither ?

Thais. Don't you see

The Captain ?

Par. Yes, I see him—to my sorrow.

The presents from my master wait your pleasure.

Thra. Why do we stop thus ? wherefore go not hence ?

[angrily.

Par. Beseech you, Captain, let us, with your leave,

* Produce our presents, treat, and parley with her !

Thra. Fine gifts, I warrant you, compar'd with mine !

Par. They'll answer for themselves.—Holo, there ! order
The slaves, I told you, to come forth.—Here, this way !

Enter a Black Girl.

Do You stand forward !—This girl, ma'am, comes quite From Æthiopia.

Thra. Worth about three Minæ. †

Gnat. Scarce.

Par. Ho ! where are you, Dorus ?—oh, come hither !

Enter Chærea in the Eunuch's habit.

An Eunuch, Madam ! — of a lib'ral air,

* Treat, and parley with her.] Convenire
& colloqui. Military terms ; used by Parmeno to sneer at Thrao. DONATUS.

† Worth about three Minæ.] A Mina was equal to 3 l. 4 s. 7 d. COOKE.

And

And in his prime!

Thais. Now as I live, he's handsome!

Par. What say You, Gnatho? Is he despicable?

Or, Captain, what say You?—Dumb?—Praise sufficient!

Try him in letters, exercises, musick:

In all the arts, a gentleman should know,

I'll warrant him accomplish'd.*

Thra. Troth, that Eunuch

Is well enough.

Par. And he, who sends these presents,

Requires you not to live for him alone,

And for his sake to shut out all mankind:

Nor does he tell his battles, shew his wounds,

Or shackle your free will, as some folks do. [looking at Thrafo.]

But when 'twill not be troublesome, or when

You've leisure, in due season, he's content

If then he is admitted.

Thra. This poor fellow

Seems to belong to a poor wretched master.

Gnat. Beyond all doubt; for who that could obtain

Another, would endure a slave like this?

* I'll warrant him accomplish'd.] From the following passage in Twelfth Night, concerning the disguise of Viola, one might be almost tempted to imagine that Shakespeare had the Eunuch of Terence in his eye.

Conceal me what I am, and be my aid

For such disguise as haply shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this Duke;
Thou shalt present me as an Eunuch to him:
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of musick,
That will allow me very worth his service.

Par.

Par. Peace, wretch, that art below the meanest slave!
You, that could bring your mind so very low,
As to cry Ay and No at yon fool's bidding,
I'm sure, might get your bread out o' the fire.*

Thra. Why don't we go? [impatiently.

Thais. Let me but carry in These first, and give some orders in the house,
And I'll attend you. [Exit with Chærea, and the Æthiopian.

Thra. I'll depart from hence.
Gnatho, wait you for her!

Par. It ill beseems
The dignity of a renown'd commander,
To 'squire his mistress in the street.

Thra. Away,
Slave! you're beneath my notice—like your master. [Exit Par.

Gnat. Ha! ha! ha! ha!

Thra. What moves your laughter?

Gnat. That
You said just now: and then the Rhodian came Across my mind.—But Thais comes.

Thra. Go, run,

* Get your bread out of the fire.] E flamma petere cibum. A proverb to express the lowest degree of meanness and infamy: taken from a custom among the Antients of throwing victuals into the fire, at the time of burning their dead; to eat which was looked on as an act of the greatest indignity. COOKE.

And see that ev'ry thing's prepar'd at home !

Gnat. It shall be done. [Exit.

Thais. [entering with Pythias] Take care now, Pythias, *
Great care, if Chremes come, to press him stay ;
Or, if that's inconvenient, to return :
If that's impossible, then bring him to me !

Pyth. I'll do so.

Thais. Hold ! what else had I to say ?
Take care, be sure, of yonder virgin ! see,
You keep at home !

Thra. Let's go !

Thais. Girls, follow me !

[Exit, attended by Servants and Thrafo.

S C E N E III.

CHREMES alone.

In truth, the more and more I think, the more
I am convinc'd that Thais means me ill :
So plain I see her arts to draw me in.
Ev'n when she first invited me, (and when
Had any ask'd, What business have you there ?

* Take care now, Pythias, &c.] An artful preparation for the ensuing difference between her and Thrafo. DONATUS.

The question would have stagger'd me) she fram'd
Sev'ral excuses to detain me there.

* Said she had made a sacrifice, and had Affairs of consequence to settle with me.

—Oho! thought I immediately, I smell
A trick upon me!—down she sat, behav'd
Familiarly, and tried to beat about

For conversation. Being at a loss,
She ask'd, how long my parents had been dead?
—I told her, long time since:—on which she ask'd,
Whether I had a country-house at Sunium?

—And how far from the sea?—I half believe
She likes my villa, and would wheedle me
To give it her.—Her final questions were,
If I ne'er lost a little sister thence?

—Who was mis'd with her?—what she had, when lost?
If any one could know her?—why should Thais
Demand all this, unless,—a faucy baggage!—
She means to play the counterfeit, and feign
Herself that sister?—but if She's alive,
She is about sixteen, not more: and Thais
Is elder than myself.—She sent beside

* Made a sacrifice.] The Antients used to offer a sacrifice, before they entered on any affair of importance. COOKE.

To beg I'd come again. — Or, let her say
 What she would have ; or, not be troublesome !
 I'll not return a third time. — Ho ! who's there ?
 Here am I ! Chremes !

S C E N E I V.

Enter P Y T H I A S.

Pyth. Oh, sweet, charming, Sir !

Chre. A coaxing huffy !

Pyth. Thais begs and prays
 You'd come again to-morrow.

Chre. I am going
 Into the country.

Pyth. Nay, now, prithee come !

Chre. I can't, I tell you.

Pyth. Walk in then, and stay
 Till she returns herself.

Chre. Not I.

Pyth. And why,
 Dear Chremes ?

Chre. Go, and hang yourself !

Pyth. Well, Sir,
 Since you're so positive, shall I intreat you

To go to her?

Chre. I will.

Pyth. Here, Dorias! [a maid-servant enters.]

Conduct this gentleman to Captain Thrafo's.

[Pythias re-enters. — Chremes goes out another way with Dorias.]

S C E N E V.

ANTIPHON alone.

But yesterday a knot of us young fellows
 Affembled at Piræus, and agreed
 To club together for a feast to-day.
 Chærea had charge of all; the rings were given,*
 And time, and place appointed. — The time's past;
 No entertainment's at the place; and Chærea
 Is no where to be found. — I can't tell what
 To think on't. — Yet the rest of my companions
 Have all commission'd me to seek him out.
 I'll see if he's at home; — but who comes here
 From Thais? — Is it He, or no? — 'Tis He. — — What manner of man's here? — what habit's that?

* Rings were given.] It was usual to deposit their rings, as pledges of observing their appointment.

—What mischief has the rogue been at? I'm all Astonishment, and cannot guess. — But I'll Withdraw awhile, and try to find it out. [retires.]

S C E N E VI.

Enter CHÆREA, in the Eunuch's habit.

Chær. [looking about] Is any body here? — No, nobody.
 Does any follow me? — No, nobody.
 May I then let my extacy break forth
 * O Jupiter! 'tis now the very time
 When I could suffer to be put to death,
 Left not another transport like to this,
 Remain in life to come. — But is there not
 Some curious impertinent to come Across me now, and murder me with questions?
 — To ask, why I'm so flutter'd? why so joyful?
 Whither I'm going? whence I came? and where
 I got this habit? what I'm looking after?
 Whether I'm in my senses? or stark mad?

Anti. I'll go myself, and do that kindness to him.

* Ob, Jupiter! 'tis now the very time.]
Prob 'jupiter! Nunc est profecto, cum interfici perpeti me possim, Ne hoc gaudium contamineat vita agritudine aliqua. The passage from Othello, cited in a note on the last act of the Andrian, contains exactly the same sentiment, and almost in the same words with this of Terence.

Chærea, [advancing] what's all this flutter ? what's this drefs ?
What is't transports you ? what d'ye want ? art mad ?
Why do you stare at me ? and why not speak ?

Chær. O happy, happy day ! — Save you, dear friend !
There's not a man on earth I'd rather see
This moment than yourself.

Anti. Come, tell me all !

Chær. Tell you ! I will beseech you give me hearing.
D'ye know my brother's mistress here ?

Anti. Yes : Thais,
Or I'm deceiv'd.

Chær. The same.

Anti. I do remember.

Chær. To-day a girl was sent a present to her.
Why need I speak or praise her beauty now
To you, that know me, and my taste so well ?
She set me all on fire.

Anti. Is she so handsome ?

Chær. Most exquisite : Oh, had you but once seen her,
You would pronounce her, I am confident,
The first of woman-kind.—But to be brief,
I fell in love with her.—By great good luck
There was at home an Eunuch, which my brother
Had bought for Thais, but not yet sent thither.

— I had

—I had a gentle hint from Parmeno,
Which I seiz'd greedily.

Anti. And what was that?

Chær. Peace, and I'll tell you.—To change dresses with him,
And order Parmeno to carry me
Instead of him.

Anti. How? for an Eunuch, You?

Chær. E'en so.

Anti. What good could you derive from that?

Chær. What good!—why, see, and hear, and be with her
I languish'd for, my Antipho!—was that
An idle reason, or a trivial good?
—To Thais I'm deliver'd; she receives me,
And carries me with joy into her house;
Commits the charming girl——

Anti. To whom?—to You?

Chær. To Me.

Anti. In special hands, I must confess.

Chær. —Injoins me, to permit no man come near her;
Nor to depart, myself, one instant from her;
* But in an inner chamber to remain

* But in an inner chamber, &c.] In Greece the women always occupied the interior apartments, where nobody was permitted to come to them, but relations, and the slaves that waited upon them. DACIER.

Alone with her alone. I nod, and look
Bashfully on the ground.

Anti. Poor simple soul!

Chær. I am bid forth, says she; and carries off
All her maid-servants with her, save some few
Raw novices, who strait prepar'd the bath.
I bad them haste; and while it was preparing,
In a retiring-room the Virgin sat;
* Viewing a picture, where the tale was drawn
Of Jove's descending in a golden show'r
To Danae's bosom.—I beheld it too,
And because He of old the like game play'd,
I felt my mind exult the more within me,
That Jove should change himself into a man,
And steal in secret thro' a stranger-roof,
With a mere woman to intrigue.—Great Jove,
Who shakes the highest heav'ns with his thunder! †
And I, poor mortal man, not do the same! —

* Viewing a picture, where the Tale, &c.] A very proper piece of furniture for the house of a courtesan, giving an example of loose and mercenary love; calculated to excite wanton thoughts, and at the same time hinting to the young lover that he must make his way to the bosom of his mistress, like Jupiter to Danae, in a shower of gold. Oh the avarice of harlots! DONATUS.

† Who shakes the highest heavens with his thunder.] Qui templa cæli summa sonitu concutit. A parody on a passage in Ennius. DONATUS.

I did it, and with all my heart I did it.
—While thoughts, like these, possess my soul, they
The girl to bathe. She goes, bathes, then returns:
Which done, the servants put her into bed.
I stand to wait their orders. Up comes one,
Here, harkye, Dorus! take this fan, and mark
You cool her gently thus, while we go bathe.
When we have bath'd, You, if you please, bathe too
I, with a sober air, receive the fan.

Anti. Then would I fain have seen your simple face!
I should have been delighted to behold
How like an ass you look'd, and held the fan.

Chær. Scarce had she spoke, when all rush'd out o'doors;
Away they go to bathe; grow full of noise,
As servants use, when masters are abroad.
Meanwhile sleep seiz'd the virgin: I, by stealth,
Peep'd thro' the fansticks thus; then looking round,
And seeing all was safe, made fast the door.

Anti. What then?

Chær. What then, fool!

Anti. I confess.

Chær. D'ye think,
Blest with an opportunity like this,

* So short, so wish'd for, yet so unexpected,
I'd let it slip? No. Then I'd been, indeed,
The thing I counterfeited.

Anti. Very true.

But what's become of our club-supper?

Chær. Ready.

Anti. An honest fellow! where? at your own house?

Chær. At Freeman Discus's.

Anti. A great way off.

Chær. Then we must make more haste.

Anti. But change your dress.

Chær. Where can I change it? I'm distressed. From home
I must play truant, lest I meet my brother.

My father too, perhaps, is come to town.†

Anti. Come then to my house! that's the nearest place
Where you may shift.

Chær. With all my heart: let's go!
And at the same time, I'll consult with you

* An opportunity, so short.] Short indeed, considering the number of incidents, which, according to Chærea's relation, are crowded into it. All the time, allowed for this adventure, is the short space between the departure of Thais with Thraso and the entrance of Chærea; so that all this variety of business of sleeping, bathing, ravishing, &c. is dispatched during the two soliloquies of Antipho and Chremes, and the short scene between Chremes and Pythias. The truth is, that a very strict and religious adherence to the Unities often drives the Poet into as great absurdities as the profest violation of them.

† My father too perhaps is come to Town.] Preparation for the arrival of the father.

DONATUS.

How to enjoy this dear girl.

Anti. Be it so.*

* Instead of this scene, Fontaine in his Eunuch, has substituted one between Chærea and Pamphila, whom he brings on the stage, as Baron does Glycerium in the Andrian. Chærea professes honourable love, leaves her in the house of Thais, and applies to his father, by whose consent he at last obtains her in marriage. Fontaine was most probably right in his conjecture, that the Plot of the Eunuch, exactly as it lies in Terence, was not conformable to the severity of the French, or, perhaps the English stage. It would certainly therefore have been advisable, in order to adapt it for representation before a modern audience, to change some circumstances, and the introduction of Pamphila might perhaps have been hazarded not without success: But by departing so essentially, as Fontaine has done from Menander and Terence, the very foundations of the fable are undermined, and it loses most part of that vivacity and interest so remarkable in the Play before us.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

*Enter DORIAS, with a Casket.

D O R I A S.

NOW, as I hope for mercy, I'm afraid,
From what I've seen, lest yonder swaggerer
Make some disturbance, or do violence
To Thais. For, as soon as Chremes came,

* Enter Dorias.] 'Tis true, the Antients have kept the continuity of scenes somewhat better than the Moderns. Two do not perpetually come in together, talk, and go out together; and other two succeed them, and do the same throughout the act, which the English call by the name of single scenes; but the reason is, because they have seldom above two or three scenes, properly so called, in every act; for it is to be accounted a new scene, not only every time the stage is empty, but every person who enters, though to others, makes it so; because he introduces a new business. Now the plots of their plays being narrow, and the persons few, one of their acts was written in a less compass than one of our well-wrought scenes; and yet they are often deficient even in this. To go no farther than Terence, you find, in the Eunuch, Anpho entering single in the midst of the third Act, after Chremes and Pythias were gone off: In the same play you have likewise Dorias beginning the fourth act alone; and after she has made a relation of what was done at the Soldier's entertainment, (which by the way was very inartificial, because she was presumed to speak directly to the audience; and to acquaint them with what was necessary to be known, but yet should have been so contrived by the Poet, as to have been told by persons of the Drama to one another, and so by them to have come to the knowledge of the people) she quits the stage, and Phædria enters next, alone likewise: He also gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country in monologue, to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. In his Adelphi, or Brothers, Syrus and Demea enter, after the scene is broken by the departure of Softrata, Geta, and Canthara; and indeed you can scarce look into any of his comedies, where you will not presently discover the same interruption.

DRYDEN'S Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

(The youth that's brother to the virgin) she Beseech'd of Thraso, he might be admitted.
 This piqu'd him; yet he durst not well refuse.
 She, fearing Chremes should not be detain'd,
 Till she had time and opportunity
 To tell him all she wish'd about his sister,
 Urg'd Thraso more and more to ask him in.
 The Captain coldly asks him; down he sat;
 And Thais enter'd into chat with him.
 The Captain, fancying a rival brought Before his face, resolv'd to vex Her too:
 Here, boy, said he, let Pamphila be call'd
 To entertain us!—Pamphila! cries Thais;
 She at a banquet!—No, it must not be.—
 Thraso insisting on't, a broil ensued:
 On which my Mistress slyly slipping off
 Her jewels, gave them me to bear away;
 Which is, I know, a certain sign, she will,
 As soon as possible, sneak off herself.

[Exit.]

* Slipping off her jewels.] Because courtezans were not allowed to wear gold or jewels in the street. DACIER.

S C E N E II.

Enter PHÆDRIA.*

Phæd. Going into the country, I began
 (As happens when the mind is ill at ease)
 To ponder with myself upon the road,
 Tossing from thought to thought, and viewing all
 In the worst light. While thus I ruminatè,
 I pass'd unconsciously my country-house,
 And had got far beyond, e'er I perceiv'd it.
 I turn'd about, but with a heavy heart;
 And soon as to the very spot I came
 Where the roads part, I stopt. Then paus'd awhile:
 Alas! thought I, and must I here remain
 Two days? alone? without her?—Well! what then?
 That's nothing.—What, is't nothing?—If I've not
 The privilege to touch her, shall I not Behold her neither?—If one may not be,
 At least the other shall.—And certainly † Love, in its last degree, is something still.

* Enter Phædria.] Here the Poet artfully finds a reason to bring Phædria back again; as he at first with equal art sent him out of the way, to give probability to those incidents, necessary to happen in his absence. DONATUS.

† Love, in its last degree, &c.] Extremâ li-neâ amare, haud nihil est. Supposed to be a metaphor taken from the lines drawn in the chariot-races.

—Then I, on purpose, past the house. — But see!
Pythias breaks forth affrighted. — What means this?

S C E N E III.

Enter PYTHIAS and DORIAS; PHÆDRIA at a distance.

Pyth. Where shall I find, unhappy that I am,
Where seek this rascal-slave?—this slave, that durst
To do a deed like this?—Undone! undone!

Phæd. What this may be, I dread.

Pyth. And then the villain,
After he had abused the virgin, tore
The poor girl's cloaths, and dragg'd her by the hair.

Phæd. How's this?

Pyth. Who, were he now within my reach,
How could I fly upon the vagabond,
And tear the villain's eyes out with my nails!

Phæd. What tumult's this, arisen in my absence?
I'll go and ask her.—[going up.]—What's the matter, Pythias?
Why thus disturb'd? and whom is it you seek?

Pyth. Whom do I seek? Away, Sir Phædria!
You and your gifts together!

Phæd. What's the matter?

Pyth.

Pyth. The matter, Sir! The Eunuch, that you sent us,
Has made fine work here! the young Virgin, whom
The Captain gave my mistress, he has ravish'd.

Phæd. Ravish'd? How say you?

Pyth. Ruin'd, and undone!

Phæd. You're drunk.

Pyth. Would those, who with me ill, were so!

Dori. Ah, Pythias! what strange prodigy is this?

Phæd. You're mad: how could an Eunuch—

Pyth. I don't know

Or who, or what he was.—What he has done,
The thing itself declares.—The Virgin weeps,
Nor, when you ask what ails her, dare she tell.
But he, good man, is no where to be found:
And I fear too, that when he stole away,
He carried something off.

Phæd. I can't conceive

Whither the rascal can have flown, unless
He to our house, perhaps, slunk back again.

Pyth. See now, I pray you, if he has.

Pyth. I will. [Exit.

Dori. Good lack! so strange a thing I never heard.

Pyth. I've heard, that they lov'd women mightily,
But could do nothing; yet I never thought on't:

For if I had, I'd have confin'd him close
In some bye place, nor trusted the girl to him.

S C E N E IV.

Re-enter PHÆDRIA, with DORUS the Eunuch, in Chærea's cloaths.

Phæd. Out, rascal, out!—What are you resty, firrah?
Out, thou vile bargain!

Dor. Dear fir! [crying.

Phæd. See the wretch!

What a wry mouth he makes!—Come, what's the meaning
Of your returning? and your change of dress?
What answer, firrah?—If I had delay'd
A minute longer, Pythias, I had miss'd him,
He was equipp'd so bravely for his flight.

Pyth. What, have you got the rogue?

Phæd. I warrant you.

Pyth. Well done! well done!

Dori. Ay, marry, very well.

Pyth. Where is he?

Phæd. Don't you see him?

Pyth. See him? whom?

Phæd. This fellow, to be sure.

Pyth.

Pyth. This man! who is he?

Phæd. He that was carried to your house to-day.

Pyth. None of our people ever laid their eyes
Upon this fellow, Phædria!

Phæd. Never saw him?

Pyth. Why, did you think this fellow had been brought To us?

Phæd. Yes, surely; for I had no other.

Pyth. Oh dear! this fellow's not to be compar'd
To t'other.—He was elegant, and handsome.

Phæd. Ay, so he might appear awhile ago,
Because he had gay cloaths on: now he seems Ugly, because he's stript.

Pyth. Nay, prithee, peace!
As if the difference was so very small!—
The youth conducted to our house to-day,
'Twould do you good to cast your eyes on, Phædria:
This is a drousy, wither'd, weazel-fac'd,*
Old fellow.

Phæd. How?—you drive me to that pass,

* Weazel-fac'd, old fellow.] Menander's words, as preserved by Donatus, are these, αἰὼς ἐστὶ γαλεωτῆς γερον, which he charges Terence with having misunderstood. Γαλη, he says is a Weazle, and γαλεωτῆς a Lizard. But Terence is very likely to have made Pythias express her dislike of the Eunuch, by comparing him to a Weazle, whose skin has much of the tawny in it. As to the passage from Menander, there is nothing of the colour of the animal expressed in it. A Lizard being a thin animal, Menander probably intended a similitude in the lankness. γαλεωτῆς γερον may therefore be construed a thin, half-starv'd fellow. COOKE.

That I scarce know what I have done myself.

— Did not I buy you, rascal? [to Dorus.

Dor. Yes, sir.

Pyth. Order him,

To answer me.

Phæd. Well, question him.

Pyth. to Dorus.] Was You
Brought here to-day? [shakes his head.] See there! Not He. It was Another, a young lad, about sixteen,
Whom Parmeno brought with him.

Phæd. to Dorus.] Speak to Me!
First tell me, whence had you that coat? What, dumb?
I'll make you speak, you villain! [beating him.

Dor. Chærea came— [crying.

Phæd. My brother?

Dor. Yes, sir!

Phæd. When?

Dor. To-day.

Phæd. How long since?

Dor. Just now.

Phæd. With whom?

Dor. With Parmeno.

Phæd. Did you,
Know him before?

Dor. No, Sir; nor e'er heard of him.

Phæd.

Phæd. How did you know then that he was my brother?

Dor. Parmenø told me so; and Chærea
Gave me these cloaths—

Phæd. Confusion! [aside.

Dor. Put on mine;
And then they both went out o' doors together.

Pyth. Now, sir, do you believe that I am sober?
Now do you think, I've told no lie? And now
Are you convinc'd the Girl has been abus'd!

Phæd. Away, fool! d'ye believe what this wretch says?

Pyth. What signifies belief?—It speaks itself.

Phæd. apart to Dorus.] Come this way—hark ye!—further still. — Enough.

Tell me once more.—Did Chærea strip you?

Dor. Yes.

Phæd. And put your cloaths on?

Dor. Yes, sir!

Phæd. And was brought
In your stead hither?

Dor. Yes.

Phæd. Great Jupiter! [pretending to be in a passion with him.
What a most wicked scoundrel's this?

Pyth. Alas!

Don't you believe, then, we've been vilely us'd?

Phæd. No wonder if you credit what he says?
 I don't know what to do. [aside.]—Here, harkye, firrah!
 Deny it all again. [apart to Dorus.]—What! can't I beat
 The truth out of you, rascal?—have you seen
 My brother Chærea? [aloud and beating him.

Dor. No, fir! [crying.

Phæd. So! I see
 He won't confess without a beating.—This way! [apart.] Now
 He owns it; now denies it.—Ask my pardon! [apart.

Dor. Beseech you, fir, forgive me!

Phæd. Get you gone, [kicking him.

Dor. Oh me! oh dear! [Exit howling.

Phæd. aside. I had no other way
 To come off handsomely.—We're all undone.
 —D'ye think to play your tricks on me, you rascal?
 [Aloud, and Exit after Dorus.

S C E N E V.

Manent PYTHIAS and DORIAS.

Pyth. As sure as I'm alive, this is a trick
 Of Parmeno's.

Dori. No doubt on't.

Pyth. * I'll devise

* I'll devise some means to-day, &c.] The revenge of Pythias on Parmeno is very artfully made productive of the catastrophe. DONATUS.

Some means to-day to fit him for't.—But now,
What would you have me do?

Dori. About the Girl?

Pyth. Ay; shall I tell? or keep the matter secret?

Dori. Troth, if you're wise, you know not what you know,
Nor of the Eunuch, nor the ravishment:
So shall you clear yourself of all this trouble,
And do a kindness to our mistress too.

Say nothing, but that Dorus is gone off.

Pyth. I'll do so.

Dori. Prithee is not Chremes yonder?
Thais will soon be here.

Pyth. How so?

Dori. Because
When I came thence, a quarrel was abroad
Amongst them.

Pyth. Carry in the jewels, Dorias!
Meanwhile I'll learn of Chremes what has happen'd. [Exit Dori.

S C E N E VI.

Enter C H R E M E S tipsy.

Chrem. So! so!—I'm in for't—and the wine I've drank
Has made me reel again.—Yet while I sat,

How

How sober I suppos'd myself!—But I
 No sooner rose, than neither foot, nor head,
 Knew their own business!

Pyth. Chremes!

Chrem. Who's that?—Ha!

Pythias!—How much more handsome you seem now,
 Than you appear'd a little while ago!

Pyth. I'm sure you seem a good deal merrier.

Chrem. I'faith it's an old saying, and a true one,
 * “ Ceres and Bacchus are warm friends of Venus.”
 —But, pray, has Thais been here long before me?

Pyth. Has she yet left the Captain's?

Chrem. Long time since:

An age ago. They've had a bloody quarrel.

Pyth. Did not she bid you follow her?

Chrem. Not she:

Only she made a sign to me at parting.

Pyth. Well, wasn't that enough?

Chrem. No, faith! I did not

At all conceive her meaning, till the Captain
 Gave me the hint, and kick'd me out o' doors.
 —But here she is! I wonder how it was,
 I overtook her!

* Ceres and Bacchus are warm friends of Venus.] Sine Cerere & Libero friget Venus. A proverb, signifying that love is cold without good eating and drinking.

SCENE VII.

Enter THAIS.

Thais. I am apt to think,
The Captain will soon follow me, to take
The Virgin from me: Well then, let him come!
But if he does but lay a finger on her,
We'll tear his eyes out.—His impertinence,
And big words, while mere words, I can endure;
But if he comes to action, woe be to him!

Chrem. Thais, I have been here some time.

Thais. My Chremes!
The very man I wanted!—Do you know
That you have been th' occasion of this quarrel?
And that this whole affair relates to you?

Chrem. To me! how so?

Thais. Because, while I endeavour,
And study to restore your sister to you,
This and much more I've suffer'd.

Chrem. Where's my Sister?

Thais. Within, at my house?

Chrem. Ha! [with concern.

Thais. Be not alarm'd:

She

She has been well brought up, and in a manner
Worthy herself and you.

Cbrem. Indeed?

Thais. 'Tis true:

And now most freely I restore her to you,
Demanding nothing of you in return.

Cbrem. I feel your goodness, Thais, and shall ever Remain much bounden to you.

Thais. Ay, but now
Take heed, my Chremes, lest e'er you receive
The maid from me, you lose her! for 'tis She,
Whom now the Captain comes to take by storm.
—Pythias, go, fetch the casket with the proofs!

Cbrem. D'ye see him, Thais? [looking out.

Pyth. Where's the casket plac'd?

Thais. Plac'd in the cabinet.—D'ye loiter, huffy? [Ex. Pyth.

Cbrem. What force the Captain brings with him against you!
Good heav'n! .

Thais. Are you afraid, young gentleman?

Cbrem. Away!—who? I? afraid?—There is no man
Alive less so.

Thais. You'd need be stout at present.

Cbrem. What kind of man d'ye take me for?

Thais. Consider,

He,

He, whom you've now to cope with, is a stranger,
 Less powerful than you, less known, and less
 Befriended here than you!

Chrem. I know all that:

But why, like fools, admit, what we may shun?
 Better prevent a wrong, than afterwards
 Revenge it, when receiv'd.—Do you step in,
 And bolt the door, while I run to the Forum,
 And call some officers to our assistance.

[going.

Thais. Stay! [holding him.

Chrem. 'Twill be better.

Thais. Hold!

Chrem. Nay, let me go!

I'll soon be back.

Thais. We do not want them, Chremes.
 Say, only, that this Maiden is your sister,
 And that you lost her when a child, and now
 Know her again for your's.

Enter PYTHIAS.

Thais to Pyth.] Produce the proofs!

Pyth. Here they are.

Thais. Take them, Chremes!—If the Captain
 Attempts to do you any violence,

A a

Lead

Lead him before a magistrate. D'ye mark me?

Chrem. I do.

Thais. Be sure now speak with a good courage!

Chrem. I will.

Thais. Come, gather up your cloak.—Undone!
I've got a champion, who wants help himself. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E VIII.

Enter THRASO, GNATHO, SANGA, &c.

Thraso. Shall I put up with an affront so gross,
So monstrous, Gnatho?—No, I'd rather die.
Simalio, Donax, Syrus, follow me!
First, I will storm their castle.

Gnat. Excellent!

Thra. Next carry off the Virgin.

Gnat. Admirable!

Thra. Then punish Thais herself.

Gnat. Incomparable!

Thra. Here, in the center, Donax, with your club!
Do you, Simalio, charge on the left wing!
You, Syrus, on the right!—Bring up the rest!
Where's the Centurion Sanga, and his band
Of rascal runaways?

San.

San. Here, fir!

Thra. How now?

Think'st thou to combat with a dishclout, slave!
That thus thou bring'st it here?

San. Ah, fir! I knew
The valour of the gen'ral, and his troops;
And seeing this affair must end in blood,
I brought a clout, to wipe the wounds withall.

Thra. Where are the rest?

San. Rest! Plague, whom d'ye mean?
There's nobody, but Sannio, left at home.

Thra. Lead you the van; [to Gnatbo.] And I'll bring up the rear:
Thence give the word to all.

Gnat. What wisdom is!
Now he has drawn up these in rank and file,
His post behind secures him a retreat.

Thra. Just so his line of battle Pyrrhus form'd.

Chremes and Thais appear above at a window.

Chrem. D'ye see, my Thais, what he is about?
To bar and bolt the doors was good advice.

Thais. Tut, man! yon fool, that seems so mighty brave,
Is a mere coward. Do not be afraid!

Thra. What were best? [to Gnatho.

Gna. Troth, I wish you had a fling:

That you from far in ambush might attack them!

They'd soon fly then, I warrant you.

Thra. But see!

Thais appears.

Gnat. Let's charge them then! Come on!

Thra. Halt!—'Tis the part of a wise general
To try all methods, e'er he come to arms.
How do you know, but Thais may obey
My orders without force?

Gnat. Oh, gracious heavens!
Of what advantage is it to be wise!
I ne'er approach but I go wiser from you.

Thra. Thais, first answer this! Did you, or no,
When I presented you the Virgin, promise,
To give yourself some days to me alone?

Thais. What then?

Thra. Is that a question, when you durst
To bring a rival to my face? —

Thais. And what
Business have you with him?

Thra. ——— And then stole off
In company with him?

Thais.

Thais. It was my pleasure.

Thra. Therefore, restore me Pamphila; unless
You chuse to see her carried off by force.

Cbrem. She restore Pamphila to you? Or You
Attempt to touch her, rascal?

Gnat. Ah, beware!

Peace, peace, young gentleman!

Thra. to Cbrem.] What is't you mean?
Shall I not touch my own?

Cbrem. Your own, you scoundrel?

Gnat. Take heed! you know not whom you rail at thus.

Cbrem. Won't you be gone?—here, hark ye, fir!—
d'ye know

How matters stand with you?—if you attempt
To raise a riot in this place to-day,
I'll answer for it, that you shall remember
This place, to-day, and me, your whole life long.

Gnat. I pity you: to make so great a man
Your enemy!

Cbrem. Hence! or I'll break your head.

Gnat. How's that, you hang-dog? Are you for that sport?

Thra. Who are You, fellow?—what d'ye mean?—and what Have you to do with Pamphila?

Cbrem. I'll tell you.

First,

First, I declare, that she's a free-born woman!

Thra. How?

Chrem. And a citizen of Athens.

Thra. Hui!

Chrem. My sister.

Thra. Impudence!

Chrem. So, Captain, now

I give you warning, offer her no force!

—Thais, I'll now to Sophrona, the Nurse,

And bring her here with me to see the proofs.

Thra. And you prohibit me to touch my own?

Chrem. Yes, I prohibit you.

Gnat. D'ye hear? he owns

The robbery himself. Isn't that sufficient?

Thra. And, Thais, you maintain the same?

Thais. Ask those,

Who care to answer. [Shuts down the window.]

Manent THRASO, and GNATHO, &c.

Thra. What shall we do now?

Gnat. Why—e'en go back again!—This harlot here
Will soon be with you to request forgiveness.

Thra. D'ye think so?

Gnat. Ay, most certainly. I know

The ways of women.—When you will, they won't.
And when you won't, they're dying for you.

Thra. True.

Gnat. Shall I disband the army?

Thra. When you will.

Gnat. * Sanga, as well becomes a brave militia,
Take to your houses and fire-sides again.

San. My mind was like a sop i'th' pan, long since.

Gnat. Good fellow!

Sang. To the right about there! march!

[Exit with Gnatho and Thrafo at the head of the troops.]

* Sanga, as well becomes, &c.] Beaumont and Fletcher seem to have had their thoughts on this scene in their draught of the Mob-Regiment in Philaster. The old Captain dis-embodies his Militia much in the same manner with Gnatho. — “ Fall off again my sweet “ Youths; come, and every man trace to his “ house again, and hang his pewter up.”

ACT V. SCENE I.

THAIS and PYTHIAS.

THAIS.

STILL, still, you baggage, will you shuffle with me ?
—“ I know—I don’t know—he’s gone off—I’ve heard—
“ I was not present.”—Be it what it may,
Can’t you inform me openly ?—The Virgin,
Her cloaths all torn, in fullen silence weeps.
The Eunuch’s fled.—What means all this ? and what
Has happen’d ?—Won’t you answer me ?

Pyth. Alas !

What can I answer you ?—He was, they say,
No Eunuch.

Thais. What then ?Pyth. Chærea.Thais. Chærea !

What Chærea ?

Pyth. Phædria’s younger brother.Thais. How !

What’s that, hag ?

Pyth.

Pyth. I've discover'd it: I'm fure on't.

Thais. Why, what had he to do with us? or why
Was he brought hither?

Pyth. That I cannot tell;
Unless, as I suppose, for love of Pamphila.

Thais. Alas! I am undone; undone, indeed,
If that, which you have told me now, be true.
Is't that the Girl bemoans thus?

Pyth. I believe so.

Thais. How, careless wretch! was that the charge I gave you
At my departure?

Pyth. What could I do? She
Was trusted, as you bad, to him alone.

Thais. Oh, jade, you fat the wolf to keep the sheep.
—I'm quite asham'd to 've been so poorly bubbled.

Pyth. Who comes here? — Hift! peace, madam, I beseech you!

We're safe: we have the very man. [Seeing Chærea at a distance.

Thais. Where is he?

Pyth. Here, on the left; d'ye see him, ma'am?

Thais. I see him.

Pyth. Let him be seiz'd immediately!

Thais. And what
Can we do to him, fool?

Pyth. Do to him, say you?

—See, what a saucy face the rogue has got!
Ha'nt he?—and then how settled an assurance!

S C E N E II.

Enter CHÆREA.

Chær. * At Antipho's, as if for spite, there were
His father and his mother both at home,
So that I could by no means enter, but
They must have seen me. Meanwhile, as I stood
Before the door, came by an old acquaintance,
At sight of whom, I flew, with all my speed,
Into a narrow unfrequented alley;
And thence into another, and another,
Frighten'd and flurried as I scampered on,
Left any one should know me.—But is that
Thais? 'Tis she herself. I'm all aground.
What shall I do?—Pshaw! what have I to care?
What can she do to me?

Thais. Let's up to him.

* At Antipho's, &c.] Chærea assigns very natural reasons for not having changed his dress: and here it is worth while to observe the art of Terence, since the sequel of the fable made it absolutely necessary that Chærea should appear again before Thais in the habit which he wore while in the house. DACIER.

Oh,

Oh, Dorus! Good fir, welcome!—And fo, firrah,
You ran away.

Chær. Yes, madam!

Thais. And you think
It was a clever trick?

Chær. No, madam!

Thais. Can you
Believe, that you fhall go unpunish'd for it?

Chær. Forgive me this one fault! If I commit
Another, kill me!

Thais. Do you dread my cruelty?

Chær. No, ma'am!

Thais. What then?

Chær. I was afraid, left She Accufe me to you. [pointing to Pythias.

Thais. Upon what account?

Chær. A little matter.

Pyth. Rogue! a little matter?
Is it fo little, think you, to abuse
A virgin, and a citizen?

Chær. I thought
She was my fellow-fervant.

Pyth. Fellow-fervant!
I can scarce hold, from flying at his hair.

Monstrous! he's come to make his sport of us.

Thais. Away! you rave.

Pyth. Why so? if I had don't,
I should have still been in the monster's debt;
Particularly, as he owns himself
Your servant.

Thais. Well—no more of this.—Oh, Chærea,
You've done a deed unworthy of yourself:
For granting, I perhaps, might well deserve
This injury, it was not honourable
In you to do it.—As I live, I know not
What counsel to pursue about this girl;
You've so destroy'd my measures, that I can't Restore her, without blushing, to her friends,
Nor so deliver her, as I propos'd,
To make them thank me for my kindness, Chærea.

Chær. Henceforth, I hope, eternal peace shall be Betwixt us, Thais! Oft from things like these,
And bad beginnings, warmest friendships rise.
What if some God hath order'd this?

Thais. Indeed,
I'll so interpret it, and wish it so.

Chær. I prithee do!—and be assured of this,
That nought I did in scorn, but all in love.

Thais.

Thais. I do believe it; and, on that account,
More readily forgive you: for oh, Chærea,
I am not form'd of an ungentle nature,
Nor am I now to learn the pow'r of love.

Chær. Now, Thais, by my life, I love Thee too.

Pyth. Then, by my troth, you must take care of him.

Chær. I durst not —

Pyth. I don't mind a word you say.

Thais. Have done!

Chær. But now, in this one circumstance,
Let me beseech you to assist me! I
Commit myself intirely to your care:
Invoke you, as my patroness; implore you.
Perdition seize me, but I'll marry her!

Thais. But if your father ——

Chær. What of Him? I know
He'll soon consent, provided it appears
That she's a citizen.

Thais. If you will wait
A little while, her brother will be here:
He's gone to fetch the nurse, that brought her up;
And You shall witness the discovery.

Chær. I will remain then.

Thais. But, in the mean time,

Had you not rather wait within, than here
Before the door?

Chær. Much rather.

Pyth. What the plague
Are you about?

Thais. What now?

Pyth. What now, indeed?
Will you let Him within your doors again?

Thais. Why not?

Pyth. Remember that I prophecy,
He'll make some fresh disturbance.

Thais. Prithee, peace!

Pyth. It seems, you have not had sufficient proof
Of his assurance.

Chær. I'll do no harm, Pythias!

Pyth. I'll not believe it, Chærea, till I see it.

Chær. But you shall keep me, Pythias!

Pyth. No, not I.

For, by my troth, I would trust nothing with you,
Neither to keep, nor be kept by you.—Hence!
Away!

Thais. Oh brave! the brother's here. [looking out.

Chær. Confusion!

Let's in, dear Thais! I'd not have him see me
Here in this dress.

Thais.

Thais. Why so? Are you asham'd?

Chær. I am indeed.

Pyth. Indeed! asham'd! oh dear!

Think of the girl!

Thais. Go in! I'll follow you.

Pythias, do you stay here to bring in Chremes.

[Exeunt Thais and Chærea.]

S C E N E III.

PYTHIAS, CHREMES, SOPHRONA.

Pyth. What can I think of? what can I devise?

Some trick now to be even with that rogue

Who palm'd this young spark on us.

Chrem. leading the nurse.] Nay but stir

Your stumps a little faster, nurse!

Soph. I come.

Chrem. Ay, marry; but you don't come on a jot.

Pyth. Well! have you shewn the tokens to the nurse?

Chrem. I have.

Pyth. And pray what says she? Did she know them?

Chrem. At first fight.

Pyth. Oh brave news! I'm glad to hear it;

For I've a kindness for the Girl. Go in;

My

My mistress is impatient for your coming.

[Exeunt Chrem. and Soph.

See, yonder's my good master Parmeno,
Marching this way: How unconcern'd, forsooth,
He stalks along!—But I've devis'd, I hope,
The means to vex him sorely.—First I'll in,
To know the truth of this discovery,
And then return to terrify this rascal.

[Exit.

S C E N E IV.

Enter P A R M E N O.

Par. I'm come to see what Chærea has been doing:
Who, if he has but manag'd matters well,
Good heav'ns, how much, and what sincere applause
Shall Parmeno acquire!—For not to mention,
In an intrigue so difficult as this,
Of so much probable expence at least
Since with a griping harlot he'd have bargain'd,
That I've procur'd for him the girl he lov'd,
Without cost, charge, or trouble; t'other point,
That, that I hold my master-piece, there think
I've gain'd the prize, in shewing a young spark
The dispositions and the ways of harlots;

Which

Which having early learnt, he'll ever shun.

[Enter Pythias behind.

When they're abroad, forsooth, there's none so clean,
 Nothing so trim, so elegant, as they;
 Nor, when they sup with a gallant, so nice!
 To see these very creatures' gluttony,
 Filth, poverty, and meanness, when at home;
 So eager after food, that they devour
 From yesterday's stale broth the coarse black bread:—
 All this to know is safety to young men.

S C E N E V.

P Y T H I A S, P A R M E N O.

Pyth. behind.] 'Faith, firrah, I'll be handsomely revenged
 For all you've done and said. You shall not boast
 Your tricks on us without due punishment.

[aloud, coming forward.

Oh heav'ns! oh dreadful deed! oh hapless youth!
 Oh wicked Parmeno, that brought him here!

Par. What now?

Pyth. It mov'd me so, I could not bear
 To see it: therefore I flew out o' doors.
 What an example will they make of him!

C c

Par

Par. Oh Jupiter! what tumult can this be?
Am I undone, or no?—I'll e'en enquire.
Pythias, [going up] What now? what is't you rave about?
Who's to be made this terrible example?

Pyth. Who? most audacious monster! while you meant
To play your tricks on us, you have destroy'd
The youth, whom you brought hither for the Eunuch.

Par. How so? and what has happen'd? Prithee tell me!

Pyth. Tell you? D'ye know the virgin, that was sent To-day to Thais, is a citizen?
Her brother too a man of the first rank?

Par. I did not know it?

Pyth. Ay, but so it seems.
The poor young spark abus'd the girl; a thing
No sooner known, than he, the furious brother——

Par. Did what?

Pyth. First bound him hand and foot——

Par. How! bound him!

Pyth. And now, though Thais begg'd him not to do it——

Par. How! what!

Pyth. Moreover threatens, he will serve him
After the manner of adulterers;
A thing I ne'er saw done, and ne'er desire.

Par. How durst he offer at an act so monstrous?

Pyth.

Pyth. And why so monstrous?

Par. Is it not most monstrous?

Who ever saw a young man seiz'd and bound
For rapes and lewdness in a house of harlots?

Pyth. I don't know.

Par. Aye; but you must all know this.
I tell you, and foretell you, that young spark
Is my old master's son.

Pyth. Indeed! is he?

Par. And let not Thais suffer any one
To do him violence!—But why don't I
Rush in myself?

Pyth. Ah! take care, Parmeno,
What you're about; lest you do him no good,
And hurt yourself: for they imagine you,
Whatever has been done, the cause of all.

Par. What shall I do then, Wretch? what undertake?
—Oh! yonder's my old master, just return'd
To town. Shall I tell Him, or no?—I'faith
I'll tell him, tho' I am well convinc'd, it will Bring me into a scrape; a heavy one: And yet
It must be done to help poor Chærea.

Pyth. Right.

I'll in again; and you, in the mean while,
Tell the old gentleman the whole affair.

[Exit.

S C E N E VI.

* Enter L A C H E S.

Laches. I've this convenience from my neighb'ring villa;
I'm never tir'd of country, or of town,
For as disgust comes on, I change my place.
—But is not that our Parmeno? 'Tis he
For certain.—Whom d'ye wait for, Parmeno,
Before that door?

Par. Who's that? oh, fir! you're welcome:
I'm glad to see you safe return'd to town.

Laches. Whom do you wait for?

Par. I'm undone: my tongue
Cleaves to my mouth thro' fear.

Laches. Ha! what's the matter?
Why do you tremble so? Is all right? Speak!

Par. First, fir, I'd have you think, for so it is,

* Enter Laches.] Here the Poet introduces Laches, as he did Parmeno just before, in a state of perfect tranquillity; that the sudden turn of their state of mind might be more entertaining to the spectators. DONATUS.

Whatever has befall'n, has not befall'n
Through any fault of mine.

Laches. What is't?

Par. That's true.

Your pardon, fir, I should have told that first.
—Phædria, fir, bought a certain Eunuch, as
A present to send her.

Laches. Her!—Her! whom?

Par. Thais.

Laches. Bought? I'm undone! at what price?

Par. Twenty Minæ.

Laches. I'm ruin'd.

Par. And then Chærea's fall'n in love
With a young mufick-girl.

Laches. How! what! in love!

Knows He, already, what a harlot is?

Has He stol'n into town? More plagues on plagues.

Par. Nay, fir! don't look on me! it was not done
By my advice.

Laches. Leave prating of yourself.

As for you, rascal, if I live—But first
Whatever has befallen, tell me, quick!

Par. Chærea was carried thither for the Eunuch:

Laches. He for the Eunuch?

Par.

Par. Yes: since when, within
They've seiz'd and bound him for a ravisher.

Laches. Confusion!

Par. See the impudence of harlots!

Laches. Is there ought else of evil or misfortune,
You have not told me yet?

Par. You know the whole.

Laches. Then why do I delay to rush in on them? [Exit.

Par. There is no doubt but I shall smart for this.
But since I was oblig'd to't, I rejoice
That I shall make these strumpets suffer too:
For our old gentleman has long desir'd
Some cause to punish them; and now he has it.

S C E N E VII.

Enter PYTHIAS, PARMENO at a distance.

Pyth. Well! I was ne'er more pleas'd in all my life,
Than when I saw th' old man come blund'ring in.
I had the jest alone; for I alone
Knew what he was afraid of.

Par. Hey! what now?

Pyth. I'm now come forth t' encounter Parmeno.
Where is he?

Par.

Par. She seeks me.

Pyth. Oh, there he is.

I'll go up to him.

Par. Well, fool, what's the matter? [Pythias laughs.
What wou'd you? what d'ye laugh at? Hey! what still?

Pyth. Oh, I shall die: I'm horribly fatigu'd
With laughing at you. [laughing heartily.

Par. Why so? pray!

Pyth. Why so? [laughing.
I ne'er saw, ne'er shall see, a greater fool.
Oh, it's impossible to tell, what sport*
You've made within.—I swear, I always thought
That you had been a shrewd, sharp, cunning fellow.
What! to believe directly what I told you!
Or was you prick'd in conscience for the sin
The young man had committed thro' your means,

* What sport you've made within.] There is a great error, in regard to the Unity of Time, in Terence's Eunuch, when Laches, the old Man, enters by mistake into the house of Thais, where betwixt his Exit and the Entrance of Pythias, who comes to give ample relation of the disorders he has raised within, Parmeno, who was left upon the stage, has not above five lines to speak. C'est bien employer un temps si court.

DRYDEN's Essay of Dramatick Poesie.

Besides the absurdity here taken notice of by Dryden, in regard to Time, there is also another inconvenience, in the present instance, arising from too strict an adherence to the Unity of Place. What a figure would this narration of Pythias have made, if thrown into action! The circumstances are in themselves as truly comick as those of any scene in this excellent play; and it would be well worth while to follow Laches into the house, to be present at the ridiculous distress and confusion which his presence must occasion.

There is however, much more to be commended, and even imitated, than censured in the construction of this last act. All that passes between Pythias, Parmeno, and Laches, is truly admirable.

That

'That you must after tell his father of him?
How d'ye suppose he felt, when old Grey-beard
Surpriz'd him in that habit?—What! you find
That you're undone. [laughing heartily.

Par. What's this, Impertinence?

Was it a lie, you told me? D'ye laugh still?
Is't such a jest to make fools of us, hag?

Pyth. Delightful! [laughing.

Par. If you don't pay dearly for it!—

Pyth. Perhaps so. [laughing.

Par. I'll return it.

Pyth. Oh, no doubt on't. [laughing.

But what you threaten Parmeno, is distant:
You'll be trufs'd up to-day; who first draw in
A raw young lad to sin, and then betray him.
They'll both conspire to make you an example. [laughing.

Par. I'm done for.

Pyth. Take this, slave as a reward
For the fine gift you sent us; so, farewell! [Exit Pythias.

Par. I've been a fool indeed; and like a rat,
Betray'd myself to-day by my own squeaking.

SCENE VIII.

* Enter THRASO, GNATHO, [Parmeno behind.]

Gnat. What now? in what hope, or with what design
Advance we hither? what adventure, Thraſo?

Thraſo. What do I mean?—To Thais to ſurrender
On her own terms?

Gnat. Indeed?

Thraſo. Indeed: why not,
As well as Hercules to Omphale?

Gnat. A fit example.—Wou'd I might behold
† Your head broke with her ſlipper! [afide.] But her doors

* Enter Thraſo and Gnatho.] With the entrance of Laches into the houſe of Thais, and in conſequence of it, his conſent to the marriage of Chærea with Pamphila, the Fable of the Eunuch is certainly concluded: and all that follows, like the laſt Scene of the Andrian, is but the lame completion of an Epiſode, limping after the main action. In the four firſt acts the adventures of Thraſo are ſo artfully interwoven with the other buſineſs of the play, that they are fairly blended and incorporated with the fable of the Eunuch: but here we perceive that though our Author has got rid of one of Menander's pieces, the other, the Colax, ſtill hangs heavy on his hands. Was an author to form his play on twenty different pieces, if he could melt them all down into one action, there would be no impropriety: but if he borrows only from Two, whenever the epiſode ceases to act as one of the neceſſary ſprings of the main action, it becomes redundant, and the Unity of the Action (perhaps the only Unity, which ought never to be violated) is deſtroyed. Thraſo, ſays Donatus, is brought back again, in order to be admitted to ſome ſhare in the good graces of Thais, that he may not be made unhappy at the end of the play: but ſurely it is an eſſential part of the Poetical Juſtice of Comedy to expoſe coxcombs to ridicule, and to puniſh them, though without any ſhocking ſeverity, for their follies.

† Your head broke with her ſlipper.] There was no doubt at Athens ſome Comedy of the Loves of Hercules and Omphale; in which the Heroe was repreſented with a diſtaff by the ſide of his miſtreſs, who broke his head with her ſlipper. To which Gnatho alludes in this place. DACIER.

Creak, and fly open.

Thraſo. 'Sdeath! what miſchief now?
I ne'er ſo much as ſaw this face before.
Why burſts he forth with ſuch alacrity?

S C E N E IX.

Enter CHÆREA at another part of the Stage.

Chær. Lives there, my countrymen, a happier man
To-day than I?—Not one.—For on my head
The Gods have plainly emptied all their ſtore,
On whom they've pour'd a flood of bliſs at once.

Par. What's he ſo pleas'd at?

Chær. ſeeing him.] Oh my Parmeno!
Inventor, undertaker, perfecter
Of all my pleaſures, know'ſt thou my good fortunes?
Know'ſt thou my Pamphila's a citizen?

Par. I've heard ſo.

Chær. Know'ſt thou, ſhe's betroth'd my wife?

Par. Oh brave, by heav'n!

Gnat. Hear you, what he ſays? [to Thraſo.

Chær. Then I rejoice, my brother Phædria's love
Is quietly ſecur'd to him for ever:
We're now one family: and Thais has Found

Found favour with my father, and resign'd
Herself to us for patronage and care.

Par. She's then entirely Phædria's?

Chær. Ay, entirely.

Par. Another cause of joy: the Captain routed!

Chær. See, Parmeno, my brother (wherefoe'er
He be) know this, as soon as possible!

Par. I'll see if he's at home. [Exit.

Thraſo. Haft any doubt,
Gnatho, but I'm entirely ruin'd?

Gnat. None at all.

Chær. What shall I mention first? whom praise the most?
Him that advis'd this action? or myself
That durst to undertake it?—or extol
Fortune, the governess of all, who deign'd,
Events so many, of such moment too,
So happily to close within one day?
Or shall I praise my father's frank good-humour,
And gay festivity?—Oh, Jupiter,
Make but these blessings sure!

S C E N E X.

Enter PHÆDRIA.Phæ. Oh heavenly powers!

What wond'rous things has Parmeno just told me!

But where's my brother?

Chær. Here he is.Phæd. I'm happy.Chær. I dare believe you are; and trust me, brother,
Nought can be worthier of your love than Thais:
Our family are all much bounden to her.Phæd. So! you'd need sing her praise to me!Thrafo. Confusion!As my hope dies, my love increaseth. Gnatho,
Your help! my expectation's all in you.Gnat. What would you have me do?Thrafo. Accomplish this;By pray'r, by purchase, that still I may have
Some little share in Thais.Gnat. A hard task!Thrafo. Do but incline to do't, you can, I know.
Effect it, and demand whatever gift,
Whate'er reward you please, it shall be your's.Gnat.

Gnat. Indeed?

Thraſo. Indeed.

Gnat. If I accompliſh this,
I claim, that you agree to throw your doors,
Preſent or abſent, always open to me;
A welcome uninvited gueſt for ever.

Thraſo. I pawn my honour as the pledge.

Gnat. I'll try.

Phæd. What voice is that? Oh, Thraſo!

Thraſo. Gentlemen,
Good day!

Phæd. Perhaps you're not acquainted yet,
With what has happen'd here?

Thraſo. I am.

Phæd. Why then
Do I behold you in theſe territories?

Thraſo. Depending on—

Phæd. Depend on nought but this!
Captain, I give you warning, if, henceforth,
I ever find you in this ſtreet, although
You tell me, “I was looking for another,
“I was but paſſing through,” expect no quarter.

Gnat. Oh fie! that is not handſome.

Phæd. I have ſaid it.

Gnat.

Gnat. You cannot be so rude.

Phæd. It shall be so.

Gnat. First grant me a short hearing: if you like
What I propose, agree to't.

Phæd. Let us hear!

Gnat. Do you retire a moment, Thrafo! [Thrafo retires.] First,
I must beseech you both, most firmly think,
That I, whate'er I do in this affair,
For my own sake I do it: But if that Likewise advantage you, not to agree
In you were folly.

Phæd. What is't, you propose?

Gnat. I think you should admit the Captain, as Your rival.

Phæd. How? admit him?

Gnat. Nay consider!

Phædria, you live at a high rate with Her,
Revel, and feast, and stick at no expence.
Yet what you give's but little, and you know
'Tis needful Thais should receive much more.
Now to supply your love without your cost,
A fitter person, one more form'd, can't be
Than Thrafo is: First, he has wherewithal
To give, and gives most largely: A fool too,

A dolt,

A dolt, a block, that snores out night and day;
Nor can you fear she'll e'er grow fond of him;
And you may drive him hence whene'er you please.

Phæd. What shall we do? [to Chærea.

Gnat. Moreover this; the which I hold no trifle, no man entertains
More nobly or more freely.

Phæd. I begin
To think we've need of such a fool.

Chær. And I.

Gnat. Well judg'd! and let me beg one favour more;
Admit me of your family!—I have Roll'd this stone long enough.*.

Phæd. We do admit you.

Chær. With all our hearts.

Gnat. And you, sirs, in return,
† Shall pledge me in the Captain; eat him; drink him:
And laugh at him.

Chær. A bargain!

Phæd. ‡ 'Tis his due.

* Roll'd this stone.] Pleasant allusion to the fable of Sisyphus. DONATUS.

† Shall pledge me in the Captain, &c.] Facetiously said in the character of the Parasite, who discourses in convivial terms. DONATUS.

* 'Tis his due.] I cannot think that this play, excellent as it is in almost all other respects, concludes consistently with the manners of Gentlemen: there is a meanness in Phædrus and Chærea consenting to take Thraso into their Gnat. Thraſo, whene'er you pleaſe, approach!

Thraſo. Pray now,
How ſtands the caſe?

Gnat. Alas! they knew you not:
But when I drew your character, and prais'd
Your worth, according to your deeds and virtues,
I gain'd my point.

Thraſo. 'Tis well: I'm much oblig'd;
I ne'er was any where, in all my life,
But all folks lov'd me dearly.

Gnat. Did not I
Say, he had all the Attick Elegance?

Phæd. He is the very character you drew.

Gnat. Retire then.—Ye, [to the audience.] farewell, and clap your hands!

their ſociety with a view of fleecing him, which the Poet ſhould have avoided. COOKE.

The conſent of Laches to the continuance of his Son's connection with Thais is alſo ſo repugnant to modern manners, that Fontaine found himſelf obliged to change that circumſtance in his imitation of this Comedy.

Self-Tormentor.

T H E

SELF-TORMENTOR.

T H E
S E L F - T O R M E N T O R,

Acted at the MEGALESIAN GAMES.

L. Cornelius Lentulus and L. Valerius Flaccus, Curule Ædiles: Principal Actors, L. Ambivius Turpio and L. Atilius Prænestinus: The Musick composed by Flaccus, Freedman to Claudius: Taken from the Greek of Menander: Acted the first time with unequal flutes: afterwards with two right-handed ones: It was acted a third time. Published, M. Juventius and M. Sempronius, Consuls.

Year of Rome	—	590
Before Christ	—	160

TO THE HONOURABLE

HARRY PULTENEY,

Lieutenant-General of His Majesty's Forces,

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS HUMBLY INSCRIBED,

BY HIS MOST OBLIGED,

AND OBEDIENT HUMBLE SERVANT,

GEORGE COIMAN.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE,
MENEDEMUS,
CHREMES,
CLINIA,
CLITIPHO,
SYRUS,
DROMO.

SOSTRATA,
ANTIPHILA,
BACCHIS,
NURSE,
PHRYGIA, and other servants of Bacchis.

SCENE, a village near ATHENS.

P R O L O G U E.

LEST any of you wonder, why the Bard
 To an old actor hath assigned the part
 * Sustain'd of old by young performers; † That I'll first explain: then say what brings me here.
 To-day, a whole play, wholly from the Greek,
 We mean to represent:—The Self-Tormentor:
 Wrought from a single to a double plot.‡
 Now therefore that our Comedy is new, §

* Sustain'd of old by young performers.] It appears from this passage that the Prologue was usually spoken by young men. DACIER.

† That I'll first explain; then say what brings me here.] Terence has been accused by some critics of being worse than his word here; for, say they, he does not first explain why he has chosen an old performer. But this accusation is unjust, for it is the first thing which he does: what he says before is merely to make the piece known, which business he dispatches in two words, and that too in a parenthesis.

DACIER.

This passage is also vindicated by Scaliger in his Poeticks, chap. 3. book 6.

‡ Wrought from a single to a double plot.] Duplex quæ ex argumento facta est simplici. This passage has greatly perplexed the Commentators. Julius Scaliger was of opinion that Terence called this Comedy Duplex, double, because it was acted at two different times:

the two first Acts at the close of the evening, and the remaining three on the following morning; and that it therefore served as two distinct pieces. But this conjecture is not admissible: Terence only meant to say that he had doubled the characters; instead of one old man, one young gallant, one mistress, as in Menander, he had two old men, &c. he therefore adds very properly, novam esse ostendi,—That our Comedy is NEW,—which certainly could not have been implied, had the characters been the same in the Greek poet. DACIER.

§ That our Comedy is new, &c.] Terence pretends, that having doubled the subject of the Self-Tormentor, his piece is new. I allow it; but whether it is better on that account, is quite another question. DIDEROT.

It is impossible not to regret that there are not above ten lines of the Self-Tormentor preserved among the Fragments of Menander. We are so deeply interested by what we see of that character in Terence, that one cannot

but

And what it is, I've shewn : who wrote it too,
 And whose in Greek it is, were I not sure
 * Most of you knew already, would I tell.
 But, wherefore I have ta'en this part upon me,
 In brief I will deliver : for the Bard
 Has sent me here as Pleader, not as Prologue :
 You he declares his Judges, me his Counsel :
 And yet as Counsel nothing can I speak
 More than the Author teaches me to say,
 Who wrote th' oration which I now recite.

As to reports, which envious men have spread,
 That he has ranfack'd many Grecian plays,
 While he composes some few Latin ones,
 That he denies not, he has done ; nor does
 Repent he did it ; means to do it still ;
 Safe in the warrant and authority
 Of greater bards, who did long since the same.
 Then for the charge, that his Arch-Enemy
 Maliciously reproaches him withal, but be curious to enquire in what manner the Greek Poet sustained it through five acts. The Roman Author, though he has adopted the title of the Greek Play, has so altered the fable, that Menedemus is soon thrown into the back-ground, and Chremes is brought forward as the principal object: or, to vary the allusion a little, the Menedemus of Terence seems to be a drawing in miniature copied from a full length, as large as the life, by Menander.

* Most of you know already.] This is a remarkable proof how careful the Romans were in the study of the Greek Poets. S.

That

That he but lately hath applied himself
 † To musick, with the genius of his friends,
 Rather than natural talents, fraught; how true,
 Your judgment, your opinion, must decide.
 I would intreat you, therefore, not to lean
 To tales of slander, rather than of candour.
 Be favourable; nurse with growing hopes
 The bards, who give you pleasing novelties;
Pleasing I say, not such as His I mean,
 * Who lately introduc'd a breathless slave,
 Making the croud give way:—But wherefore trace
 A dunce's faults? which shall be shewn at large,
 When more he writes, unless he cease to rail.
 Attend impartially! and let me once

† To Musick.] The Ancients called that Musick, which we now term the Belles Lettres. Aristophanes more than once calls the art of dramattick writing, Musick. DACIER.

* Who lately introduced a breathless slave, &c.] It must have been a very wretched piece, if this was the most beautiful passage in it. Yet such an incident is often necessary, as may be seen in the Amphitryon of Plautus, where Mercury runs in crying,

Concedite atque abscedite, omnes de viâ decedite.

Terence therefore only blames those authors, who, like Lucius, made it the capital circumstance in their plays. DACIER.

Had Madam Dacier quoted the whole passage in the Amphitryon, I think, it would have been evident that Plautus also meant to ridicule the like practice.

*Concedite atque abscedite, omnes de viâ decedite,
 Nec quisquam tam audax fuit homo, qui obviam insistat mihi!*

Nam mihi quidem, hercle, qui minus liceat Deo minitari

Populo, ni decedat mihi, quam servulo in Comædiis?

Plaut. Amph. Act 2. Sc. 4.

Give place, make room, and clear the way
 before me,

Nor any be so bold to stop my speed!
 For shall not I, who am a Deity,
 Menace the croud, unless they yield to me,
 As well as Slaves in Comedy?

Without

Without annoyance act an easy part; †
 Left your old servant be o'er-labour'd still
 With toilsome characters, the running slave,
 The eating parasite, enrag'd old man,
 The bold-fac'd sharper, covetous procurer ;
 Parts, that ask pow'rs of voice, and iron sides.
 Deign then, for my sake, to accept this plea,
 And grant me some remission from my labour.
 For they, who now produce new comedies,
 Spare not my age : If there is aught laborious,
 They run to me ; but if of little weight,
 Away to others. In our piece to-day

† Act an easy part.] Statariam agere. The word Statariam has not been thoroughly understood ; in order more fully to explain it, we must have recourse to its original meaning. The Greek Poets divided their choruses into two different sorts of verse, the στασιμα μελη, statarios versus, so called, because the actor who repeated them never moved from his place ; and into the παροδικα μελη, motorios versus, because the performer skipped and danced about while he was repeating his part. This has been perfectly well explained by the Scholiasts upon Æschylus and Aristophanes. The Romans made the same distinctions, and called those Pieces Statarie which were grave and composed, and required little or no action. The Motorie on the contrary were lively and full of business and action.—This Play is of the former kind. — Some Commentators imagine Terence means one character only by Statariam, as if personam were to be understood ; though the Ancients did call the actors statarios et motorios, according to the different parts they were engaged in, I am convinced that it is not in this place at all applicable to them, but to the whole comedy : how else are we to explain the 45th verse.

Sin levis est, ad alium mox defertur gregem.

To apply it to any one of the other actors of the company, would be overstraining the sense of the text. DACIER.

Being entirely of a different opinion from Madam Dacier, concerning the sense of the words Statariam agere, I have translated them as referring merely to the character, which the Prologue-Speaker was to play, (which I apprehend to have been Menedemus) and not to the whole comedy : and the lines immediately subsequent, I think, confirm this interpretation, as they contain a description of the laborious characters he usually represented, Clamore fummo,

cum

* The Stile is pure : Now try my talents then
 In either character. If I for gain,
 Never o'er-rated my abilities;
 If I have held it still my chief reward
 To be subservient to your pleasure; fix
 In me a fair example, that our youth
 May seek to please You, rather than Themselves.

cum labore maximo; and which he urges as a plea for his being allowed to act an easier part at present.

— — — *date potestatem, mihi
 Statariam agere, ut liceat per silentium.*

As to the difficulty started by Madam Dacier of reconciling Sin levis, &c. to the rest of the context, it is a difficulty, which I must own I cannot entirely comprehend.

† The stile is pure.] Terence with great propriety commends this play for the purity of its stile; he knew it to be very deficient in point of action, and therefore determined to repair that defect by the vivacity and purity of the language; and he has perfectly succeeded. DACIER.

Here I have again quoted Madam Dacier merely to express my dissent from her opinion. The play is, in my mind, far from being destitute of action: the plot being as artfully constructed, and containing as many unexpected turns and variety of incidents, as any of our Author's pieces, as may perhaps appear in the course of these notes.

T H E

S E L F-T O R M E N T O R.*

A C T . I. S C E N E I.

C H R E M E S, M E N E D E M U S.

C H R E M E S.

THOUGH our acquaintance is as yet but young,
 Since you have bought this farm that neighbours mine,
 And little other commerce is betwixt us;
 Yet or your virtue, or good neighbourhood,

* The Self-Tormentor.] There is, perhaps, no play of Terence, wherein the Author has pointed out the place and time of action with more exactness than in the present: and yet the settling those two points has occasioned a most furious controversy between two learned Frenchmen, Hedelin and Menage. Madam Dacier, in her remarks, has endeavoured to moderate between them, sometimes inclining to one side, and sometimes to the other. I, perhaps, in my turn, shall occasionally differ from all three, not doubting but I shall become equally liable to the reprehensions of future critics. I shall however, endeavour to found my remarks on an accurate examination of the piece itself, and to draw my arguments from within rather than from without. The principal cause of the different errors of Hedelin and Menage, seems to me to have been an idle parade of learning, foreign to the purpose; together with an obstinate adherence to their several systems, which having once adopted, they were resolved to square all their arguments to the support of their opinions, rather than to direct them towards the investigation of truth. The matters in dispute between them, though drawn out to a great length of controversy, lie in a very narrow compass. But there being in both an apparent jealousy of their characters as scholars, both were induced to multiply quotations and illustrations from other authors, instead of turning their attention sufficiently to the text, and making the poet a comment on himself; which every writer, especially those who attempt the Drama, ought to be. Each were in some instances wrong; and even when they were in the right, having condescended to maintain their opinion with false arguments, each:

(Which is in my opinion kin to friendship)

Urge me to tell you, fairly, openly,

That you appear to me to labour more

Than your age warrants, or affairs require.

Now in the name of heav'n and earth, what is't

You want? what seek you? Threescore years of age,

Or older, as I guess; with an estate,

Better than which, more profitable, none

In these parts hold; master of many slaves;

As if you had not one at your command,

You labour in their offices yourself.

I ne'er go out so soon at morn, return

So late at eve, but in your grounds I see you

* Dig, plough, or fetch and carry: in a word

each in their turn afforded the opponent an opportunity of cavilling with some appearance of justice. Many examples of this will, I think, appear in the course of these notes, from which it may be concluded, that there is no point whatever, that lies so plain and level to the understanding, but it may be rendered obscure and intricate by learned and ingenious disputants, who chuse it as a subject for the exercise of their talents and a display of their erudition.

* Dig, plough, or fetch and carry.] Fodere, aut arare, aut aliquid ferre. This passage is of much greater consequence than is generally imagined, towards the understanding the true intent and management of this play; for it is material to know what Menedemus is about when Chremes first accosts him; whether he is at work in the field, or is returning home loaded with his tools. Two very learned men engaged in a very elaborate disputation upon this subject. If Menedemus is still at work when Chremes first meets him, Terence would certainly have been guilty of a very gross impriety in the conduct of his comedy; for, as the scene never changes, Menedemus must necessarily be ever present. Terence could never be so absurd as not to guard against falling into so gross an error. He not only takes care to acquaint us with the situation of Menedemus, but also with the hour of the day, at which the piece commences; which is plainly marked out by these words, aut aliquid ferre, which decides the whole point in question. Menedemus having been at work all day, and being

You ne'er remit your toil, nor spare yourself.
 This, I am certain, is not done for pleasure.
 —You'll say, perhaps, it vexes you to see
 Your work go on so slowly ; —do but give
 The time you spend in labouring yourself
 To set your slaves to work, 'twill profit more.

Mene. Have you such leisure from your own affairs
 To think of those, that don't concern you, Chremes ?

being unable to see any longer, takes his tools on his back, and is making the best of his way home ; Chremes at that very instant meets him near his own door, where the scene lies : the beginning of this play therefore is evidently towards the close of the day, when Menedemus had quitted his work. DACIER.

There is certainly a great want of accuracy in this way of reasoning, with which Madam Dacier espouses Hedelin's argument : for why, as Menage justly says, should the words aut aliquid ferre refer to the manner in which Menedemus was then actually employed, more than the other words, federe, aut arare ? or if they were so interpreted, still they must be applied to his carrying burdens in the course of his laborious occupations, while at work in the fields. One word of marginal direction, setting down the Pantomime of the scene, according to Diderot's plan, would have solved all our doubts on this head. On the whole, Menage, I think, fails in his proofs that Menedemus is actually at work, though he labours that point exceedingly : and Hedelin is manifestly wrong in maintaining that the scene lies within the city of Athens. One of the principal objections urged by Hedelin (and referred to by Madam Dacier in the above note) to the Poet's having intended to exhibit Menedemus actually at work, when Chremes accosts him, is that the scene evidently lies between both their houses. Were the scene laid in town, as Hedelin contends, indeed it could not be : but if in the country adjacent, as Dacier agrees with Menage, why might not Menedemus be at work on a piece of ground lying between the two houses ? It is natural enough that the sight of Menedemus thus employed, might urge Chremes to presume, under the privilege of good neighbourhood, to speak to him.—There is a brevity and fullness also in the answers of Menedemus, that seems in character for a man employed, and unwilling to be interrupted, though he relents by degrees, and reluctantly suffers Chremes to force his tools from him.—His being at work too forms a kind of theatrical picture on the opening of the piece.—These, I think, are the strongest arguments, deduced from the scene itself, which can be urged in behalf of the notion of Menedemus's being exhibited as at work on his farm ; and some of them, I think appear weighty and plausible : but a further examination, with an attention to the conduct of the rest of the piece, determined me to the contrary opinion.—At the end of the scene, it is evident that Menedemus quits the stage, and enters his own house. It cannot be said, that he is prevailed on to desist from his labour by the arguments of Chremes ; since he will not even accept the invitation to supper left it should afford him a respite from his misery. It is plain Chremes. I am a man, and feel for all mankind. *

Think, I advise, or ask for information :

plain therefore, I think, that Terence meant to open the first act with the close of the day, together with the labours of Menedemus ; as he begins the third act with the break of day and the coming-forth of Menedemus, to return to his toils and self-punishment.

The length of this, and some other controversial notes on this comedy, will, I hope, be excused, when it is considered that this dispute has filled whole volumes. I thought it incumbent on me to clear up these points to the best of my abilities ; since none can be so justly reproved for having omitted to explain an author's meaning, as those who have attempted to translate him.

* I am a man, &c.] Homo sum ; humani nihil a me alienum puto. It is said that at the delivery of this sentiment, the whole theatre, though full of foolish and ignorant people, resounded with applause. ST. AUGUSTINE.

It is said this sentence was received with an universal applause. There cannot be a greater argument of the general good understanding of a people, than a sudden consent to give their approbation of a sentiment which has no emotion in it. If it were spoken with never so great skill in the actor, the manner of uttering that sentence could have nothing in it which could strike any but people of the greatest humanity, nay, people elegant and skilful in observations upon it. It is possible he might have laid his hand on his breast, and with a winning insinuation in his countenance, expressed to his neighbour that he was a man who made his case his own : yet I'll engage a player in Covent-Garden might hit such an attitude a thousand times before he would have been regarded.

STEELE'S SPECTATOR, N^o. 502.

We are not to take this, as hath constantly been done, for a sentiment of pure humanity and the natural ebullition of benevolence. We may observe in it a designed stroke of satirical resentment. The Self-Tormentor, as we saw, had ridiculed Chremes' curiosity by a severe reproof. Chremes, to be even with him, reflects upon the inhumanity of his temper. " You, " says he [or rather he implies] seem such a " foe to humanity, that you spare it not in " yourself ; I, on the other hand, am affected " when I see it suffer in another." HURD'S Dissertation on the Provinces of the Drama.

I cannot dismiss this long note without expressing my concurrence with the last cited critick in his explanation of this passage : but I cannot agree with Sir Richard Steele that sentiments of humanity are suffered to pass unnoticed on our Theatres, any more than I can conclude with the pious St. Augustine, that the Roman theatre was filled with foolish and ignorant people. A modern audience seems to be on the catch for sentiment ; and perhaps often injudiciously : for nothing can be more opposite to the genius of the Drama, whether in Tragedy or Comedy, than a forced detail of sentiments, unless, like this before us, they grow out of the circumstances of the play, and fall naturally from the character that delivers them. The original contains a play of words between homo and humani, and a retort of the word alienum, which makes it rather difficult to be given with its full force in a translation. My version, I am conscious, does not comprehend every word ; but I hope it will be found to include the whole meaning of the sentiment. It is easy to open it still further by a more diffused expression ; but I thought that conciseness made it more round, and full, and forcible. If there are any readers of a different opinion, let them substitute the two following lines ; though I must own I prefer that in the text.

I am a man ; and all calamities,
That touch humanity, come home to me.
If

If right, that I may do the same ; if wrong,
To turn you from it.

Mene. I have need to do thus.

Do you as you think fit.

Chremes. Need any man
Torment himself ?

Mene. I need. *

Chremes. If there's a cause, †
I'd not oppose it. But what evil's this ?

* I need.] Comedy relates to the whole species, Tragedy to individuals. What I mean is this, the hero of a Tragedy is such or such a man ; Regulus, or Brutus, or Cato, and no other person. The principal character of a Comedy, should on the contrary represent a great number of men. If by chance the Poet should give him so peculiar a physiognomy, that there were in society but one individual who resembled him, Comedy would relapse into its childhood, and degenerate into satire.

Terence seems to me to have fallen once into this error. His Self-Tormentor is a father afflicted at the extremities to which he has driven his son by an excess of severity ; for which he punishes himself by rags, hard fare, avoiding company, putting away his servants, and condemning himself to labour the earth with his own hands. One may venture to pronounce such a father to be out of nature. A great city would scarce in an age furnish one example of so whimsical a distress.

Horace, whose taste was of a singular delicacy, appears to me to have perceived this fault, and to have glanced at it in the following passage.

*Hic ? vix credere possis
Quam sibi non sit amicus : ita ut pater ille, Terenti
Fabula quem miserum nato vixisse fugato
Inducit, non se pejùs cruciaverit atque hic.*

No—'tis amazing, that this man of pelf,
Hath yet so little friendship for himself,
That ev'n the Self-Tormentor in the play,
Cruel, who drove his much-lov'd son away,
Amidst the willing tortures of despair,
Could not, with wretchedness like his, compare.
FRANCIS.

Nothing is more in the manner of this poet, than to have given two senses to pejus, one of which is aimed at Terence, and the other falls on Fufidius, the immediate object of his satire. DIDEROT.

Perhaps the reader will imagine the latter part of the above note, relative to Horace, is rather a refinement of the ingenious critic, than the real intention of the satirist.

† If there's a cause, &c.] Si quid laboris est, nollem. This passage has not been rightly understood. After Menedemus tells Chremes that he is resolved to torment himself, Chremes unable to account for so extraordinary and whimsical a humour in his neighbour, says, si quid laboris

What is th' offence so grievous to your nature,
That asks such cruel vengeance on yourself?

Mene. Alas! alas! [in tears.]

Chremes. Nay, weep not; but inform me.
Be not reserv'd: fear nothing: prithee, trust me:
By consolation, counsel, or assistance,
I possibly may serve you.

Mene. Would you know it?

Chremes. Ay, for the very reason I have mention'd.

Mene. I will inform you.

Chremes. But meanwhile lay down
Those rakes: don't tire yourself.

Mene. It must not be.

Chremes. What mean you?

Mene. Give me leave: that I may take
No respite from my toil.

Chremes. I'll not allow it. [taking away the rakes.]

Mene. Ah, you do wrong.

Chremes. What, and so heavy too! [weighing them in his hand.]

Mene. Such my desert.

laboris est, nollem, and means to be understood to proceed with te deterre. Something very shocking, even bordering upon desperation, must have happened, to give Menedemus cause to behave in this manner, and this obliges Chremes to be so pressing with his neighbour to quit this toilsome and fatiguing work, and the rather as it would in a great measure contribute towards his forgetting the cause of all his troubles—a piece of complaisance and politeness, which I have always been charmed with.

DACIER.

Chremes.

Chremes. Now speak. [laying down the rakes.

Mene. One only son

I have.—Have did I say?—Had I mean, Chremes.

Have I or no, is now uncertain.

Chremes. Wherefore?

Mene. That you shall know. An old Corinthian woman
Now sojourns here, a stranger in these parts,
And very poor. It happen'd, of her daughter
My son became distractedly enamour'd;—
E'en to the brink of marriage; and all this Unknown to me: which I no sooner learnt
Than I began to deal severely with him,
Not as a young and love-sick mind requir'd,
But in the rough and usual way of fathers.
Daily I chid him; crying, "How now, Sir!
"Think you that you shall hold these courses long,
"And I your father living?—Keep a mistress,
"As if she were your wife!—You are deceiv'd,
"If you think that, and do not know me, Clinia.
"While you act worthily, you're mine; if not,
"I shall act towards you worthy of myself.
"All this arises from mere idleness.
"I, at your age, ne'er thought of love; but went "To seek my fortune in the wars in Asia,

G g

" And

“ And there acquir’d in arms both wealth and glory.”

---In short things came to such a pass, the youth,
O’ercome with hearing still the self-same thing,
And wearied out with my reproaches ; thinking,
Age and experience had enabled me
To judge his int’rest better than himself,
Went off to serve the king in Asia, Chremes.

Chremes. How say you ?

Mene. Stole away three months ago,
Without my knowledge.

Chremes. Both have been to blame :
And yet this enterprize bespeaks a mind,
Modest and manly.

Mene. Having heard of this
From some of his familiars, home I came Mournful, half-mad, and almost wild with grief.
I sit me down ; my servants run to me ;
Some draw my sandals off ; while others haste
* To spread the couches, and prepare the supper :
Each in his way, I mark, does all he can
To mitigate my sorrow. Noting this,

* To spread the couches.] It will not be improper to say something here of the antient manner of eating among the Greeks and Romans : they sat, or rather lay, in an ac-cumbent posture : the beds or couches, on which they lay, were round the table, which was raised but a little from the ground.

COOKE.

“ How,

“ How, said I to myself, so many then “ Anxious for me alone? to pleasure me?
 “ So many slaves to dress me? * All this cost
 “ For me alone?---Mean while, my only son,
 “ For whom all these were fit, as well as me,
 “ Nay rather more, since he is of an age
 “ More proper for their use; him, him, poor boy,
 “ Has my unkindness driven forth to sorrow.
 “ Oh I were worthy of the heaviest curse,
 “ Could I brook that!---No; long as he shall lead
 “ A life of penury abroad, an exile
 “ Through my unjust severity, so long
 “ Will I revenge his wrongs upon myself,
 “ Labouring, scraping, sparing, slaving for him.”
 ---In short I did so; in the house I left
 Nor † cloaths, nor moveables; I scrap’d up all.

* So many slaves to dress me?] The better sort of people had eating-dresses, which are here alluded to. These dresses were light garments to put on as soon as they had bathed. They commonly bathed before eating; and the chief meal was in the evening.

COOKE.

† Cloaths, moveables,—Slaves, male and female.] Nec vas, nec vestimentum,—ancillas, &c. Among the fragments of Menander’s Heautontimorumenos, is a line much to this purpose.

Λετρον, θεραπαινας, αργυρωματα.

The bath, maid-servants, silver-utensils.

There are also two other lines, which seem to be descriptive of the miseries of being driven into exile.

ΟΙΚΟΙ ΜΕΝΕΙΝ, ΚΑΙ ΜΕΝΕΙΝ ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΟΝ,
 Η ΜΗΚΕΤ ΕΙΝΑΙ, ΤΟΥ ΚΑΛΩΣ ΕΥΔΑΙΜΟΝΑ.

Let him remain at home, and free remain,
 Or cease to be, who wou’d be truly blest!

May we not conjecture from these passages, that this first scene is a pretty close translation from Menander; especially as it contains no part of the fable, but what is merely relative to the Self-Tormentor, which, we know, occupied the whole play in the Greek poet?

My slaves, both male and female, except those
 Who more than earn'd their bread in country-work,
 I fold : Then set my house to sale : * In all
 I got together about fifteen talents ; †
 Purchas'd this farm ; and here fatigue myself ;
 Thinking I do my son less injury,
 ‡ While I'm in mis'ry too ; nor is it just
 For me, I think, to taste of pleasure here,
 Till he return in safety to partake on't.

Chremes. You I believe a tender parent, him
 A duteous son, if govern'd prudently.
 But you was unacquainted with his nature,
 And he with your's : sad life, where things are so !
 You ne'er betray'd your tenderness to him ;
 Nor durst he place that confidence in you,

* Then set my house to sale.] Inscripti illi cæ-ædes.—It appears by this, that the Greeks and Romans used to fix bills on their doors, as we do now.—*Ædes vendundæ, ædes locandæ,
 a house to be sold, a house to be let.* PATRICK.

† Fifteen talents.] A talent, according to Cooke, was equal to 193l. 15s. English money.

‡ While I'm in mis'ry too.] There is much resemblance between this character of Mene-demus, and that of Laertes in the Odyssey.
 Laertes, unhappy and afflicted at the absence of his son, is under the same trouble and anxiety.

Thy Sire in solitude foment's his care :
 The Court is joyless, for thou art not there, &c.
 Pope's Odyssey, Book XI. V. 226.

Laertes lives, the miserable Sire,
 Lives, but implores of ev'ry pow'r to lay
 The burden down, and wishes for the day.
 Torn from his offspring in the eve of life, &c.
 Book XV. V. 375.

But old Laertes weeps his life away,
 And deems thee lost ———
 The mournful hour that tore his son away
 Sent the sad fire in solitude to stray ;
 Yet busied with his slaves, to ease his woe,
 He dress'd the vine, and bad the garden blow, &c.
 Book XVI. V. 145.

Which

Which well becomes the bosom of a father.

Had that been done, this had not happen'd to you.

Mene. True, I confess : but I was most in fault.

Chremes. All, Menedemus, will, I hope, be well,
And trust, your son will soon return in safety.

Mene. Grant it, good Gods !

Chremes. They will. Now, therefore, since

* The Dionysia are held here to-day,

* The Dionysia.] The Athenians celebrated several feasts in honour of Bacchus, but there were two principal ones ; one kept in the Spring, the other in the Autumn season. The Abbé d'Aubignac [Hedelin] has been very minute in his account of these feasts, and yet after all has unhappily pitched upon the wrong one ; for he thinks the feast Terence is now speaking of, was that held in the Spring season, called by the ancients Anthesteria, where he also places that called the Pythoigia, because they then broached the wine casks ; and he grounds his opinion upon line the 50th, of the first scene in the third act.

Relevi omnia dolia, omnes serias.

I have pierc'd ev'ry vessel, ev'ry cask.

But this manner of reasoning is by no means conclusive ; for, could they not have done just the self-same thing at any other time of the year ? And in fact they did so upon all their grand festivals, in order to entertain their guests with the best wine their cellar afforded.—Besides, we may here observe that the broaching all the vessels was not in compliance with custom, but that Chremes was forced into it by the importunities of Bacchis ; neither does he mention it to Menedemus, but with an intent to let him see to what a monstrous expence he is going to expose himself : This mistake is of greater consequence than it may at first appear to be ; for it is productive of many more, and led the Abbé to place the scene of this comedy erroneously. The feast in question was that celebrated in the Autumn season, and was called Dionysia in agris, the Dionysia in the fields. Neither is the scene in Athens, as Mr. d'Aubignac supposed, but in a small village, where Chremes and Menedemus had each of them a house. The only difficulty remaining, is to account why Chremes says Dionysia hic sunt, the Dionysia are held here to-day. The reason is obvious. This feast continued for many days, but not in the same boroughs or villages at one and the same time ; to-day it was here, to-morrow there, &c. that they might assemble the more company together.

DACIER.

Menage observes that it is not clear on what authority Madam Dacier pronounces so absolutely, concerning the fluctuating manner of celebrating this feast, to-day here, to-morrow there, &c. and though he differs with Hedelin about the place in which the scene lies, yet he defends the Abbé's opinion concerning the Pythoigia in opposition to Madam Dacier. Non nostrum est tantas componere lites.

If 'tis convenient, come, and feast with me.

Mene. Impossible.

Chremes. Why so?---Nay, prithee now,
Indulge yourself a while: your absent son,
I'm sure, wou'd have it so.

Mene. It is not meet,
That I, who drove him forth to misery,
Should fly it now myself.

Chremes. You are resolv'd?

Mene. Most constantly.

Chremes. Farewel then!

Mene. Fare you well! [Exit.]

S C E N E II.

C H R E M E S alone.

He draws tears from me.---How I pity him!
---But 'tis high time, as the day goes, to warn
My neighbour Phania to come forth to supper.
I'll go, and see if he's at home.

[goes to Phania's door, and returns.]

There was,
It seems, no need of warning: for, they tell me,
He has been gone to my house some time since.

I keep

I keep my gueſts in waiting; ſo I'll in.
But my doors creak. [Clitipho appears.
Who's this? I'll ſtep aſide. [retires.

S C E N E III.

Enter CLITIPHO, ſpeaking to Clinia within.

As yet, my Clinia, you've no cauſe to fear:
They are not long: and ſhe, I'm confident,
Will be here ſhortly with the meſſenger.
Prithee, away then with theſe idle cares,
Which thus torment you!

Chremes, behind.] Whom does my ſon ſpeak to?

Clit. My father as I wiſh'd.---Good Sir, well met.

Chremes. What now?

Clit. D'ye know our neighbour Menedemus?

Chremes. Ay, very well:

Clit. D'ye know he has a ſon?

Chremes. I've heard he is in Aſia.

Clit. No ſuch thing:

He's at our houſe, Sir.

Chremes. How!

Clit. But juſt arriv'd:

Ev'n at his landing I fell in with him,

And

And brought him here to supper : for, from boys,
We have been friends and intimates.

Chremes. Good news !

Now do I wish the more, that Menedemus,
Whom I invited, were my guest to-day,
That I, and under my own roof, had been
The first to have surpris'd him with this joy !
And I may yet. [going.

Clit. Take heed ! it were not good.

Chremes. How so ?

Clit. Because the youth is yet in doubt :
Newly arriv'd ; in fear of ev'ry thing ;
He dreads his father's anger, and suspects
The disposition of his mistress tow'rds him ;
Her, whom he doats upon ; on whose account,
This difference and departure came about.

Chremes. I know it.

Clit. He has just dispatch'd his boy *
Into the city to her, and our Syrus
I sent along with him.

* He has just dispatch'd his boy into the city to her. Servolum ad eam in urbem misit. This plainly marks the scene to be in the country ; though M. d'Aubignac treats this argument with ridicule. But it is in vain for him to assert that there is not one comedy of Plautus, or Terence, where one may not meet with this expression taken in his own sense of it. He will persuade none to think so, except those who have not read them. For my part I do not recollect one instance of it, and I will venture to say it is impossible to find one. DACIER.

Chremes. What fays the fon?

Clit. Says? that he's miserable.

Chremes. Miserable!

Who need be lefs fo? for what earthly good
Can man poffefs, which he may not enjoy?
Parents, a prosp'rous country, friends, birth, riches,
Yet thefe all take their value from the mind
Of the poffeffor: He that knows their ufe,
To him they're bleffings; he that knows it not,
To him mifufe converts them into curfes.

Clit. Nay, but he ever was a crofs old man:
And now there's nothing that I dread fo much,
As left he be tranfported in his rage
To fome grofs outrages againft his fon.

Chremes. He!---He?---But I'll contain myfelf. 'Tis good
For Menedemus that his fon fhould fear. [afide.]

Clit. What fay you, Sir, within yourfelf? [overbearing.]

Chremes. I fay,
Be't as it might, the fon fhould have remain'd.
Grant that the father bore too ftrict a hand
Upon his loofe defires; he fhould have born it.
Whom would he bear withal, if not a parent?
Was't fitting that the father fhould conform
To the fon's humour, or the fon to his?

And for the rigour that he murmurs at,
 'Tis nothing: The severities of fathers,
 Unless perchance a hard one here and there,
 Are much the same: they reprimand their sons
 For riotous excesses, wenching, drinking;
 And starve their pleasures by a scant allowance.
 Yet this all tends to good: But when the mind
 Is once enslav'd to vicious appetites,
 It needs must follow vicious measures too.
 Remember then this maxim, Clitipho,
 A wife one 'tis, to draw from others' faults
 A profitable lesson for yourself.

Clit. I do believe it.

Chremes. Well, I'll in, and see
 What is provided for our supper: You,
 As the day wears, see that you're not far hence. [Exit.

S C E N E IV.

C L I T I P H O alone.

'What partial judges of all sons are fathers!
 Who ask grey wisdom from our greener years,
 And think our minds shou'd bear no touch of youth;
 Governing by their passions, now kill'd in them,
 And not by those that formerly rebell'd.

If

If ever I've a son, I promise him
He shall find me an easy father ; fit
To know, and apt to pardon his offences :
Not such as mine, who, speaking of another,
Shews how he'd act in such a case himself :
Yet when he takes a cup or two too much,
Oh, what mad pranks he tells me of his own !
But warns me now, " to draw from others' faults
" A profitable lesson for myself."
Cunning old gentleman ! he little knows,
He pours his proverbs in a deaf man's ear.
The words of Bacchis, Give me, Bring me, now
Have greater weight with me : to whose commands,
Alas ! I've nothing to reply withall ;
Nor is there man more wretched than myself.
For Clinia here, (though he, I must confess,
Has cares enough) has got a mistress, modest,
Well-bred, and stranger to all harlot arts :
Mine is a self-will'd, wanton, haughty madam,
Gay, and extravagant ; and let her ask
Whate'er she will, she must not be denied ;
Since poverty I durst not make my plea.
This is a plague I have but newly found,
Nor is my father yet appriz'd of it.

ACT II. SCENE I.

Enter CLINIA.

Clin. HAD my affairs in love been prosperous,
 They had, I know, been here long since : but, ah,
 I fear she's fall'n from virtue in my absence :
 So many things concur to prove it so,
 My mind misgives me ; opportunity,
 The place, her age, an infamous old mother,
 Under whose governance she lives, to whom Nought but gain's precious.

To him CLITIPH O.

Clit. Clinia !

Clin. Woe is me ! [to himself.

Clit. Take heed, lest some one issue from your father's,
 And chance to see you here.

Clin. I will : but yet
 My mind forebodes I know not what of ill.

Clit. What, still foreboding, ere you know the truth ?

Clin. Had there been no untoward circumstance,

They

They had return'd already.

Clit. Patience, Clinia !

They'll be here presently.

Clin. Presently ! but when ?

Clit. * Consider, 'tis a long way off : And then
You know the ways of women ; to set off,
And trick their persons out, requires an age.

Clin. Oh Clitipho, I fear ——

Clit. Take courage ; see,
Dromo and Syrus !

S C E N E II.

Enter SYRUS and DROMO, conversing at a distance.

Syrus. Say you ?

Dromo. Even so.

Syrus. But while we chat, the girls are left behind.

Clit. listening.] Girls, Clinia ! do you hear ?

Clin. I hear, I see,

And now, at last, I'm happy, Clitipho.

Dromo to Syrus.] Left behind ! troth, no wonder : so encumber'd ;

* Consider, 'tis a long way off.] Non cogitas hinc longule esse ? This passage, as well as the circumstances of the next scene, are a further confirmation of the scene's lying in the country.

A troop of waiting-women at their heels!

Clinia, listening.] Confusion! whence should she have waiting-

Clit. How can I tell? [women?

Syrus to Dromo.] We ought not to have dropp'd them.

They bring a world of baggage!

Clinia, listening.] Death!

Syrus. Gold, cloaths!

It grows late too, and they may miss their way.

We've been too blame: Dromo, run back, and meet them.

Away! quick, quick! don't loiter. [Exit Dromo.

Clin. What a wretch!

All my fair hopes quite blasted!

Clit. What's the matter?

What is it troubles you?

Clin. What troubles me?

D'ye hear? She waiting-women, gold, and cloaths!

She, whom I left with one poor servant-girl!

Whence come they, think you?

Clit. Oh, I take you now.

Syrus to himself.] Gods, what a croud! our house will hardly
What eating, and what drinking will there be! [hold them.

How miserable our old gentleman!

But here are those I wish'd to see! [seeing Clit. and Clin.

Clin. Oh Jove!

Where then are truth, and faith, and honour fled?
While I a fugitive, for love of you,
Quit my dear country, You, Antiphila,
For fordid gain desert me in distress:
You, for whose sake I courted infamy,
And cast off my obedience to my father.
He, I remember now with grief and shame,
Oft warn'd me of these women's ways; oft tried
In vain by sage advice to wean me from her.
But now I bid farewell to her for ever;
Though, when 'twere good and wholesome, I was froward.
No wretch more curst than I!

Syrus. He has misconstrued
All our discourse, I find.—You fancy, Clinia,
Your mistress other than she is. Her life,
As far as we from circumstance could learn,
Her disposition tow'rd you, are the same.

Clin. How! tell me all: for there is nought on earth
I'd rather know than that my fears are false.

Syrus. First then, that you may be appriz'd of all,
Th' old woman, thought her mother, was not so:
That beldam also is deceas'd; for this
I overheard her, as we came along,
Telling the other.

Clit.

Clit. Other! who? what other?

Syrus. Let me but finish what I have begun,
And I shall come to that.

Clit. Dispatch then.

Syrus. First,
Having arriv'd, Dromo knocks at the door:
Which an old woman had no sooner open'd,
But in goes Dromo, and I after him.
Th'old woman bolts the door, and spins again.
And now, or never, Clinia, might be known,
Coming thus unexpectedly upon her,
Antiphila's employments in your absence:
For such, as then we saw, we might presume
Her daily practice, which of all things else,
Betrays the mind and disposition most.
Busily plying of the web we found her,*
Decently clad in mourning,---I suppose,
For the deceas'd old woman.---She had on
No gold, or trinkets, but was plain and neat,
And dress'd like those who dress but for themselves.
No female varnish to set off her beauty:

* Busily plying of the web we found her.] Texentem telam studiose ipsam offendimus. This line of our author agrees almost literally with the following Greek one preserved by

Le Clerc among the fragments of Menander.

Εξ ἰσαρίας ἐκρεμάλο φιλοπονώς πανυ.

Her hair dishevel'd, long, and flowing loose
About her shoulders.—Peace! [to Clinia.

Clin. Nay, prithee, Syrus,
Do not transport me thus without a cause.

Syrus. Th' old woman spun the woof; one servant-girl,
A tatter'd dirty dowdy, weaving by her. *

Clit. Clinia, if this be true, as sure it is,
Who is more fortunate than you? D'ye mark
The ragged dirty girl that he describ'd?
A sign the mistress leads a blameless life,
When she maintains no flaunting go-between:
For 'tis a rule with those gallants, who wish
To win the mistress, first to bribe the maid.

Clin. Go on, I beg you, Syrus; and take heed
You fill me not with idle joy.—What said she
When you nam'd Me?

Syrus. As soon as we inform'd her
You was return'd, and begg'd her to come to you,

* One servant-girl, a tatter'd dirty dowdy, weaving by her.] Præterea una ancillula erat: ea texebat unâ, pannis obfita, neglecta, immunda illuvie. This passage is equally close to the sense of the following, taken from the same book.

—— και δεραπαις ην μια,
Αυτη συνφαινεν ρυπαρως διακειμενη.

Le Clerc took these Greek lines from Victorius; and Victorius copied them from a book of Politian, who had written them in the margin, not (as it should seem) of his own composition, but from a fragment, which he had somewhere met with, of Menander.

Supposing the lines in question to be genuine, may we not fairly conclude that all this fine narration is a very close imitation of Menander, as well as that other beautiful one, which opens the first Act?

She left her work immediately, and burst into a flood of tears, which one might see
 Were shed for love of you.*

Clin. By all the Gods,
 I know not where I am for very joy.
 Oh, how I trembled!

Clit. Without cause, I knew.
 But come; now, Syrus, tell us, who's that other?

Syrus. Your mistress, Bacchis.

Clit. How! what! Bacchis? Tell me,
 Where d'ye bring her, rogue?

Syrus. Where do I bring her?
 To our house certainly.

Clit. My father's?

Syrus. Ay.

Clit. Oh monstrous impudence!

Syrus. Consider, Sir;

* Were shed for love of you.] Terence's Comedy of the Self-Tormentor is written as if he hoped to please none but such as had as good a taste as himself. I could not but reflect upon the natural description of the innocent young woman made by the servant to his master. When I came to the house, &c.—He must be a very good actor, and draw attention rather from his own character than the words of the author, that could gain it among us for this speech, though so full of nature and good sense.

STEELE'S Spectator, No. 502.

+ But come; now, Syrus, &c.] Here we enter upon the other part of the fable; which the poet has most artfully complicated with the main subject, by making Syrus bring Clitipho's mistress along with Antipha. This part of the story, we know, was not in Menander.

More danger, the more honour.

Clit. Look ye, firrah,
You mean to purchase praise at my expence,
Where the least flip of yours would ruin me.
What is't you drive at?

Syrus. But——

Clit. But what?

Syrus. I'll tell you;
Give me but leave!

Clin. Permit him.

Clit. Well, I do.

Syrus. This business---now---is just as if---[drawing.

Clit. Confusion!

What a long round-about beginning!

Clin. True.

To the point, Syrus!

Syrus. I've no patience with you.
You use me ill, Sir, and I can't endure it.

Clin. Hear him: peace, Clitipho! [to Clitipho.

Syrus. You'd be in love;
Possess your mistress; and have wherewithal
To make her presents: but to gain all this You'd risque no danger. By my troth, you're wise,
If it be wise to wish for what can't be.

Take good and bad together ; both, or none ;
 Chuse which you will ; no mistress, or no danger.
 And yet the scheme I've laid is fair and safe ;
 Your mistress may be with you at your father's Without detection ; by the self-same means
 I shall procure the sum you've promis'd her,
 Which you have rung so often in my ears,
 You've almost deafen'd them.---What wou'd you more ?

Clit. If it may be so ——

Syrus. If ! the proof shall shew.

Clit. Well, well then, what's this scheme ?

Syrus. We will pretend.

That Bacchis is his mistress.

Clit. Mighty fine !

What shall become then of his own ? Shall she Pass for his too, because one's not enough
 To answer for ?

Syrus. No. She shall to your mother.

Clit. How so ?

Syrus. 'Twere tedious, Clitipho, to tell :
 Let it suffice, I've reason for it.

Clit. Nonsense !

I see no ground to make me hazard this.

Syrus. Well ; if you dread this, I've another way,

Which

Which you shall both own has no danger in't.

Clit. Ay, prithee, find that out.

Syrus. With all my heart.

I'll run and meet the women on the road,
And order them to go strait home again.

Clit. How! what!

Syrus. I mean to ease you of your fear,
That you may sleep in peace on either side.*

[going.

Clit.

* That you may sleep in peace on either side.]
In AUREM utramvis, otiosè ut dormias. Literally, on either EAR. A Latin proverb, used by Plautus as well as our author, and borrowed from the Greek. We have an instance of it among the fragments of the ΠΛΟΚΙΟΝ, or Necklace, of Menander. The subject of that comedy, if we may judge from the small, though precious remains of it, was much the same as that of the George Dandin of Moliere, the marriage of a poor man to a rich heiress. An extract or two, may perhaps not be disagreeable to the reader, and serve to relieve the dryness of the controversial notes to this comedy. The very first line contains the proverb.

Επ' αμφοτέρα νυ χ' ἢ πικληρός κατα
Μέλλει καθευδῆσθαι, κατεργασάσα μέγα
Καὶ περιζήτητον ἔργον· ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας
Ἐξέβαλε τὴν λυπησάν ἢν ἐβλετο,
Ὡς ἐπιβλεπῶσι πάντες εἰς τὸ Κρεώβουλης
Προσώπων, ἢ δ' ευγνώστος ἢ γ' ἐμὴ γυνή,
Δεσποῖνα διὰ τὴν οἶον, ἣν ἐκλήσατο.
Οὗτος ἐν πιδηκοῖς ἐστὶ δὴ τὸ λεγόμενον.
Τὸν γὰρ εἰσιώπων ἐστὶ γὰρ, εἰ καὶ βελομαι.
Βδεδύττομαι τὴν νύκτα πολλῶν μοι κακῶν
Ἀρχηγόν· οἱμοί, Κρεώβουλην λαβεῖν ἐμέ, καὶ
Ταλαντα δέκα, γυναῖον ἔσαν πηκῶς.
Εἰτ' ἐστὶ τὸ φρυγανῆα πῶς αὖν ὑποσάτον;

Μα τὸντ' Ὀλυμπιον καὶ Ἀθηναίαν, ἔδαμῶς.
Παιδισκαρίον θεραπευτικόν, καὶ λόγῳ
Ταχίον, ἀπηγαγ', ἢ ἄλλην αὖλισταγοί.

Now may our Heiress sleep on either ear,
Having perform'd a great and mighty feat,
And satisfied the longings of her soul.
Her, whom she hated most, she has cast forth,
That all the world may henceforth look upon
The visage of Creobyla, and thence
May know my wife for mistress, by the print
Of stern authority upon her brow.
She is indeed, as the old saying goes, [kept
(a) An Ass among the Apes.—This can't be
In silence, even tho' I wish'd it so.
Curse on the night, the source of all my ills!
Ah me, that I shou'd wed Creobyla!
---Ten Talents, and a wife of half-a-yard!
And then who is there can endure her pride?
By Jove, by Pallas, 'tis intolerable.
A maid most diligent, and quick as thought,
She has cast forth, to introduce another.

(a) A proverb to signify those, who are proud among those, who laugh at them.

There is another passage extant, containing part of a dialogue between the husband and an old neighbour, on the same subject; but, for the sake of variety, I shall subjoin an extract from the same comedy of a different colour.

Clit. What shall I do?

Clin. E'en profit of his scheme.

Clit. But, Syrus, tell me then ——

Syrus. Away, away!

This day, too late, you'll wish for her in vain. [going.

Clin. This is your time: enjoy it, while you may:
Who knows, if you may have the like again?

Clit. Syrus, I say.

Syrus. Call as you please, I'll on.

Clit. Clinia, you're right.---Ho, Syrus! Syrus, ho!
Syrus, I say.

Syrus. So, he grows hot at last. [to himself.

What would you, Sir? [turning about.

Clit. Come back, come back!

Syrus. I'm here. [returns.

Your pleasure, Sir!---What, will not this content you?

Clit. Yes, Syrus; me, my passion, and my fame

Ω τρις κακοδαμων, οστις αν πενης γαμει,
Και παιδοποιειται· ως αλογισος εστ' ανηρ,
Ος μητε φυλακην των αναγκαιων εχει,
Μητ' αν ατυχησας εις τα κοινα τεβει,
Επαμφιεσθαι τετο δυνατο χρημασιν.
Αλλ' εν ακαλυπτω, και ταλαιπωρω βιω
Χειμαζομενος ζη, των μεν ανιων εχων
Παντων μερος τι, των δ' αγαθων ο δυναμενος.

Thrice wretched he, that's poor and takes a wife,
And doth engender children!—Oh fool, fool!
Who undefended, bare of necessities,
Soon as ill fortune comes, that comes to all,
Can't wrap his miseries in affluence;

But in a naked, wretched, poverty
Freezes, like winter; misery his portion
Too amply dealt, and every good denied.

What Menander has in the above passage considered metaphorically, our own Shakespeare has very finely realized:

Poor naked wretches, wherefoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend
From seasons such as these? [you

KING LEAR.

I render

I render up to you : dispose of all ;

But see you're not to blame.

Syrus. Ridiculous !

Spare your advice, good Clitipho ! you know
Success is my concern still more than your's :
For if perchance we fail in our attempt,
You shall have words ; but I, alas, dry blows.
Be sure then of my diligence ; and beg
Your friend to join, and countenance our scheme.

Clin. Depend on me : I see it must be so.

Clit. Thanks, my best Clinia !

Clin. But take heed she trip not.

Syrus. Oh, she is well instructed.

Clit. Still I wonder
How you prevail'd so easily upon her ;
Her, who's so scornfull.

Syrus. I came just in time,
Time, that in most affairs is all in all :
For there I found a certain wretched captain,
Begging her favours. * She, an artful baggage,

Denied

* She, an artful baggage, &c.] Hæc arte tractabat virum, ut illius animum cupidum inopiâ accenderet. There is the same sentiment, and much of the same turn of expression in Shakespeare's All's Well that Ends Well.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancy's course
Are motives of more fancy.

Denied him, to enflame his mind the more,
 And make her court to you.---But hark ye, Sir,
 Be cautious of your conduct! no imprudence!
 You know how shrewd and keen your father is;
 And I know your intemperance too well.
 No double-meanings, glances, leers, fighs, hems,
 Coughing, or titt'ring, I beseech you, Sir!

Clit. I'll play my part ——

Syrus. Look to't!

Clit. To your content.

Syrus. But see, the women! they're soon after us. [looking out.

Clit. Where are they?---[Syrus stops him.] Why d'ye hold me?

Syrus. She is not

Your mistress now.

Clit. True: not before my father.

But now, mean while ——

Syrus. Nor now, mean while.

Clit. Allow me!

This sentiment is also finely touched upon by Ben Jonson in his Every Man in his Humour. The occasion on which it is employed by Shakespeare, is almost parallel to that in Terence, but in Ben Jonson's play it is applied to the education of youth.

I am resolv'd I will not stop his journey,
 Nor practise any violent means to stay
 Th' unbridled course of youth in him; for that Restrain'd, grows more impatient; and in kind
 Like to the eager, but the generous grey-hound,

Who ne'er so little from his game with-held,
 Turns head, and leaps up at his holder's throat.
Every Man in his Humour, Act. I.

I do not say that the above fine lines were struck out from this passage in Terence; but it is plain that the remainder of Knowell's speech, as the late ingenious editor of Jonson has justly observed, was borrowed from another part of our author's works, which shall be pointed out in the notes on the next comedy.

Syrus.

Syrus. No.

Clit. But a moment !

Syrus. No.

Clit. A fingle kifs !

Syrus. Away, if you are wife !

Clit. Well, well, I'm gone.

---What's He to do ?

Syrus. Stay here.

Clit. O happy ——

Syrus. March ! [pushes off Clitipho.

S C E N E III.

Enter BACCHIS, and ANTIPHILA at a distance.

Bacch. Well, I commend you, my Antiphila :
 Happy, that you have made it still your care,
 That virtue should seem fair as beauty in you !
 Nor, gracious Heav'n so help me, do I wonder
 If ev'ry man should wish you for his own ;
 For your discourse bespeaks a worthy mind.
 And when I ponder with myself, and weigh
 Your course of life, and all the rest of those Who live not on the common, 'tis not strange,
 Your morals should be different from our's.

Virtue's your int'rest; those, with whom we deal,
 Forbid it to be our's: For our gallants,
 Charm'd by our beauty, court us but for That;
 Which fading, they transfer their love to others.
 If then meanwhile we look not to ourselves,
 We live forlorn, deserted, and distressed.
 You, when you've once agreed to pass your life
 Bound to one man, whose temper suits with your's,
 He too attaches his whole heart to you:
 Thus mutual friendship draws you each to each;
 Nothing can part you, nothing shake your love.

Anti. * I know not others; for myself I know,
 From his content I ever drew my own.

Clin. overhearing.] Excellent maid! my best Antiphila!
 Thou too, thy love alone is now the cause
 That brings me to my native land again.
 For when away, all evils else were light
 Compar'd to wanting thee.

Syrus. I do believe it.

Clin. † O Syrus, 'tis too much: I cannot bear it.

Wretch

apart.

* I know not others, &c.] The character of Antiphila is here finely drawn, and represents innocence in perfection. There is nothing of constraint or emulation in her virtue, nor is she influenced by any consideration of the miseries likely to attend looseness or debauchery, but purely by a natural bias to virtue. DACIER.

† Clinia. O Syrus, 'tis too much.] Madam Dacier, contrary to the authority of all editions and MSS. adopts a conceit of her father's

Wretch that I am!--and must I be debarr'd
To give a loose to love, a love like this?

Syrus. And yet if I may judge your father's mind,
He has more troubles yet in store for you.

apart.

Bacch. Who is that youth that eyes us? [seeing Clinia.

Anti. Ha! [seeing him.]---Support me!

Bacch. Bless me, what now?

Anti. I faint.

Bacch. Alas, poor soul!

What is't surprizes you, Antiphila?

Anti. Is't Clinia that I see, or no?

Bacch. Whom do you see?

Clin. Welcome my soul! [running up to her.

Anti. My wish'd-for Clinia, welcome!

Clin. How fares my love?

Anti. O'erjoy'd at your return.

Clin. And do I hold thee, my Antiphila,
Thou only wish, and comfort of my soul?

Syrus. In, in, for you have made our good man wait.

[Exeunt.

father's in this place, and places this speech to Clitipho, whom she supposes to have retired to a hiding-place, where he might over-hear the conversation, and from whence he peeps out to make this speech to Syrus. This she calls an agreeable jeu de theatre, and doubts not but all lovers of Terence will be obliged to her father for so ingenious a remark: but it is to be feared that critical sagacity will not be so lavish of acknowledgements as filial piety. There does not appear the least foundation for this remark in the scene, nor has the Poet given us the least room to doubt of Clitipho's being actually departed. To me, instead of an agreeable jeu de theatre, it appears a most absurd and ridiculous device; particularly vicious in this place, as it most injudiciously tends to interrupt the course of Clinia's more interesting passion, so admirably delineated in this little scene.

ACT III. SCENE. I.

CHREMES.

'TIS now just day-break.*---Why delay I then
To call my neighbour forth, and be the first
To tell him of his son's return?---The youth,
I understand, would fain not have it so.

But

* 'Tis now just day-break.] Luceſcit hoc jam.
This is ſpoken with the eyes lifted up towards heaven; hoc has reference to cælum, which is underſtood. Thus Plautus in his Curculio.
Nam hoc quidem edepol haud multo poſt luce lucebit.

It is beyond all doubt that this play was acted at two different and diſtinct times;
the two firſt acts at night, after ſun-ſet; and the three remaining acts the next morning, at break of day: the time between the ſecond and third act was taken up with the carouſal and ſupper given by Chremes. Menander, upon account of the feaſts then celebrating, had a right to divide his comedy in this manner:
Terence took the ſame liberty, and with the ſame juſtice, ſince his plays were repreſented at Rome upon the like ſolemn occaſions. Eu-graphius, who wrote notes upon this comedy, was of opinion that this method was without precedent; but he is miſtaken. Ariſtophanes did the very ſame thing; the two firſt acts of his Plutus were performed in the evening, the three laſt early the next morning, and the time between the ſecond and third act is employed by Plutus in paying a viſit to the temple of Æſculapius, where he paſſes the whole night. If we could precisely tell the hour, at which Ariſtophanes opens his play,

we ſhould undoubtedly find he had not tranſgreſſed the unity of time (twelve hours) which is requiſite to dramatiſtick pieces. It is at leaſt certain that Terence has not exceeded it here, and that he is as exact in this particular as in every other. The play begins a little after eight at night. The two firſt acts do not laſt above two hours; they then go to ſupper; this makes an interval of fix or ſeven hours. The third act begins at the break of day, as Terence has taken care to point out, luceſcit hoc jam;—'tis now juſt day-break.—So that the three acts, which could not laſt three hours, muſt have ended about ſeven in the morning. But what is chiefly remarkable is, that this third interval is interwoven with the ſubject matter of the play, as well as it is in Ariſtophanes. Chremes, during that time, obſerves the freedoms which paſs between Clitipho and Bacchis; and this creates great part of the buſineſs of the third act.
The critics were little attentive to this, when they cry out,—Vaſta & hians & inanis comædia eſt;—there is a void, a gap, an emptineſs in this comedy.—Which is far, very far from being true; for what they call ſo, has a very material connection with the play, and may be

But shall I, when I see this poor old man
 Afflict himself so grievously, by silence
 Rob him of such an unexpected joy,
 When the discov'ry cannot hurt the son?
 No, I'll not do't; but far as in my pow'r
 Assist the father. As my son, I see,
 Ministers to th' occasions of his friend,
 Associated in counsels, rank, and age,
 So we old men should serve each other too.

SCENE

he said to be almost the very ground-work of it. Had Terence divided it so, that this interval had not entered into the subject, it would indeed have been ridiculous and insupportable. Were we to act one of Moliere's plays thus by piece-meal, the beginning to-night, and the end to-morrow morning, every body would laugh at the partition; but Terence and Menander, who were perfect masters of the drama, attempted it with success. And indeed it might even now a-days be done with propriety, nay would become necessary, provided it could be executed with equal judgment and address. DACIER.

The idea of the above note, as well as of several others of Madam Dacier, was first suggested by Scaliger, who, in the sixth book of his Poeticks, first broached the notion of this division of the comedy in the representation, in order to vindicate our author from the imputation of having left an unwarrantable chasm between the second and third acts. And it is something whimsical, that this great critick, after having depreciated our author's merit in the gross, more than any of his predecessors, should take it into his head to justify him against every objection that had been made to any particular passage in his works. But though Scaliger was ever dogmatical and positive in his opinion, yet that opinion was not always uncontrovertible: In the present instance I am so far from assenting with Madam Dacier that the fact is beyond all doubt, that I will venture to say there is not the least ground for such an assertion. Donatus, who mentions this play in his preface to the Phormio, does not afford the least colour to such an argument; nor do I believe there is any more countenance given to it by the scholiasts on Aristophanes: whose comedies it would be an extremely difficult task to reconcile to an agreement with the Unities.

One of the chief points in dispute between Hedelin and Menage, about this comedy, relates to this interval; and great part of the controversy turns upon a very obscure and uncertain part of literature, viz. whether the Athenian month Anthesterion be agreeable to our April or January. Both agree that a night elapses between the second and third act; but Hedelin, who is followed by Madam Dacier in the above note, contends that according to the time of year, and circumstances of the piece, it is an interval of six or seven hours, which Menage extends to thirteen

S C E N E II.

*Enter MENEDEMUS.

Mene. to himself.] Sure I'm by nature form'd for misery
 Beyond the rest of humankind, or else
 'Tis a false saying, though a common one,
 "That time assuages grief." For ev'ry day
 My sorrow for the absence of my son
 Grows on my mind: the longer he's away,

thirteen or fourteen. Each of them lays out a deal of learning on this question, but in my mind to very little purpose. It is agreed on all hands, that a whole night certainly passes, and the spectator has not time to enter into a minute disquisition, whether 'tis in June or December: nor indeed could any thing tend to make the observation of the Unities appear ridiculous, so much as such a trifling consideration.—As to what Madam Dacier says of this interval's being interwoven with the subject; and of the supposed employments of the characters, in their absence from the stage, being made conducive to the fable; it is perfectly just, and every skilful playwright should contrive his intervals with the like art. But to fill up those chasms by occupying the audience also in the same manner, is, I think, a more curious device than any in the Rehearsal. Madam Dacier herself could not be insensible of the difficulty, and confesses that a play of Moliere's, so divided in the representation, would appear very ridiculous; yet is willing to imagine that even a modern drama might be thus exhibited with propriety. Let us suppose therefore that, at the first opening of the theatre in the Haymarket, Sir John Vanburgh had written a comedy, in which he had introduced a masquerade at the end of the second act. The spectators assemble: two acts are played: then comes the masquerade; and the spectators, in order to fill up the interval, slip on their dominos, game, drink, dance, and intrigue 'till day-light. With what appetite would they return to the representation of the three last acts? However such a partition might be received at Rome or Athens, I think it would never go down at Paris or London: and, were it not for the example of Madam Dacier, I should imagine that even the most rigid French critick would think it more reasonable to be wafted from shore to shore by Shakespeare's chorus, than to adopt this extraordinary method of preserving the Unities.

* Enter Menedemus.] Menedemus comes out of his house at day-break to return to his work; for he has already declared that he will allow himself no respite. This is well conducted. DACIER.

The

The more impatiently I wish to see him,
The more pine after him.

Chremes. But he's come forth. [seeing Menedemus.
Yonder he stands. I'll go and speak with him.
Good morrow, neighbour ! I have news for you ;
Such news, as you'll be overjoy'd to hear.

Mene. Of my son, Chremes ? *

Chremes. He's alive and well.

Mene. Where ?

Chremes. At my house.

Mene. My son ?

Chremes. Your son.

Mene. Come home ?

Chremes. Come home.

Mene. My dear boy come ? my Clinia ? †

Chremes. He.

Mene. Away then ! prithee, bring me to him.

Chremes. Hold !

He cares not you should know of his return,
And dreads your fight because of his late trespass.

* Of my son, Chremes ?] Terence discovers uncommon judgment in preserving his characters. Menedemus, when he hears of good news, immediately enquires, if they relate to his son, thinking nothing else worthy his notice. PATRICK.

† My dear boy come ? my Clinia ?] These repetitions are very natural. There is a passage very like this in the fourth act of the Captivi of Plautus.

He fears, besides, your old severity
Is now augmented.

Mene. Did not you inform him
The bent of my affections?

Chremes. Not I.

Mene. Wherefore, Chremes?

Chremes. Because 'twould injure both yourself and him
To seem of such a poor and broken spirit.

Mene. I cannot help it. Too long, much too long,
I've been a cruel father.

Chremes. Ah, my friend,
You run into extremes; too niggardly,
Or, too profuse; imprudent either way.
First, rather than permit him entertain
A mistress, who was then content with little,
And glad of any thing, you drove him hence :
Whereon the girl was forc'd, against her will,
To grow a common gamester for her bread :
And now she can't be kept without much cost,
You'd squander thousands. For to let you know
How admirably Madam's train'd to mischief,
How finely form'd to ruin her admirers,*

* How admirably madam's, &c.] Chremes takes Bacchis for Clinia's mistress, and his own son is her real gallant. This jeu de theatre is admirable. DACTER.

She came to my house yester-night with more
 Than half a score of women at her tail,
 Laden with cloaths and jewels.---If she had
 * A Prince to her gallant, he could not bear
 Such wild extravagance : much less can You.

Mene. Is She within too ?

Chremes. She within ? Ay, truly.
 I've found it to my cost : for I have given
 To her and her companions but one supper ;
 And to give such another would undo me.
 For, not to dwell on other circumstances,
 Merely to taste, and smack, and spirit about, *
 What quantities of wine has she consum'd !
This is too rough, she cries ; some softer, pray !
 I have pierc'd every vessel, ev'ry cask ;
 Kept ev'ry servant running to and fro :
 All this ado, and all in one short night !
 What, Menedemus, must become of you,
 Whom they will prey upon continually ?
 Now, afore heaven, thinking upon this,

* A Prince to her gallant.] Satrapes si fiet amator. Satrapes is originally a Hebrew word, but in use too among the Persians, who gave this title to the governours of their provinces ; who were generally very rich, and so many petty kings in the eastern nations. PATRICK.

† Spirit about.] Pytiffando. Pytiffare is a word originally Greek, and is, what we call, a verb of imitation, for its sound very much resembles the noise made by the action of spirting wine out of the mouth. PATRICK.

I pitied you.

Mene. Why, let him have his will ; *
Waste, consume, squander ; I'll endure it all,
So I but have him with me.

Chremes. If resolv'd
To take that course, I hold it of great moment
That he perceive not you allow of this.

Mene. What shall I do then ?

Chremes. Any thing, much rather Than what you mean to do : at second hand
Supply him ; or permit his slave to trick you ;
Though I perceive they're on that scent already,
And privately contriving how to do't.
There's Syrus, and that little slave of your's
In an eternal whisper : the young men
Consulting too together : and it were Better to lose a Talent by these means,
Than on your plan a Mina : for at present
Money is not the question, but the means
To gratify the youth the safest way.
For if he once perceives your turn of mind,

* Why, let him have his will, &c.] Here we have, drawn in lively colours, the picture of a man hasty in running from one extreme to another. This gives occasion to the expedient offered by Chremes, which comes in very naturally, and insensibly leads to the remaining part of the plot. PATRICK.

And that you'd rather hazard life, and wealth,
 Than part from him ; ah, Menedemus, what
 A window to debauchery you'll open !
 Nay, life itself will grow a burthen to you ;
 For too much liberty corrupts us all.
 Whatever comes into his head, he'll have ;
 Nor think, if his demand be right or wrong.
 You, on your part, to see your wealth and son
 Both wreck'd, will not be able to endure.
 You'll not comply with his demands ; whereon
 He falls to his old fence immediately,
 And knowing where your weak part lies, will threaten
 To leave you instantly.

Mene. 'Tis very like.

Chremes. Now on my life I have not clos'd my eyes,*
 Nor had a fingle wink of sleep this night,
 For thinking how I might restore your son.

Mene. Give me your hand : and let me beg you, Chremes,
 Continue to assist me !

* Have not clos'd my eyes, &c.] Hedelin obstinately contends from this passage, that neither Chremes, nor any of his family went to bed the whole night ; the contrary of which is evident, as Menage observes, from the two next scenes. For why should Syrus take notice of his being up so early, if he had known that he had never retired to rest ?

or would Chremes have reproached Clitipho for his behaviour the night before, had the feast never been interrupted ? Eugraphius's interpretation of these words is natural and obvious ; who explains them to signify that the anxiety of Chremes to restore Clinia to Menedemus broke his rest.

Chremes. Willingly.

Mene. D'ye know, what I would have you do at present?

Chremes. What?

Mene. Since you have found out they meditate
Some practice on me, prithee, urge them on
To execute it quickly: for I long
To grant his wishes, long to see him strait.

Chremes. Let me alone. I must lay hold of Syrus,
And give him some encouragement.---But see!
Some one, I know not who, comes forth: In, in, *
Left they perceive that we consult together!
I have a little business too in hand.

Simus and Crito, our two neighbours here,
Have a dispute about their boundaries; †
And they've referr'd it to my arbitration.
I'll go and tell them, 'tis not in my power
To wait on them, as I propos'd, to-day.
I will be with you presently.

Mene. Pray do. [Exit Chremes.]

Gods! that the nature of mankind is such,
To see, and judge of the affairs of others,

* In, in, &c.] Chremes seizes this as a very plausible and necessary pretence to engage Menedemus to return home, and not to his labour in the field, as he had at first intended. DACIER.

† A dispute about their boundaries.] This circumstance is a further confirmation that the scene lies in the country.

Much better than their own! * Is't therefore so,
Because that, in our own concerns, we feel
Too much the influence of joy or sorrow?
How much more wisely does my neighbour here
Consult for me, than I do for myself!

Chremes returning.] I've disengag'd myself, that I might be
At leisure to attend on your affairs. [Exit Menedemus.

S C E N E III.

Enter SYRUS at another part of the Stage.

Syrus to himself.] This way, or that way, or some way or
For money must be had, and th' old man trick'd. [other!

Chremes overhearing.] Was I deceiv'd, in thinking they were
That slave of Clinia's, it should seem, is dull, [at it?
And so our Syrus has the part assign'd him.

Syrus. Who's there? [seeing Chremes.] Undone, if he has Chremes. Syrus! [overheard me. [aside.

Syrus. Sir!

Chremes. What now?

Syrus. Nothing.—But I wonder

* Much better than their own.] These reflections have double force, when thrown out to the audience, who are conscious how applicable they are to Chremes as well as Menedemus.

To see you up so early in the morning,
Who drank so freely yesterday.

Chremes. Not much.

Syrus. Not much? You have, Sir, as the proverb goes,
The old age of an eagle.*

Chremes. Ah!

Syrus. A pleasant,
Good sort of girl, this wench of Clinia's.

Chremes. Ay, so she seems.

Syrus. And handsome.

Chremes. Well enough.

Syrus. † Not like the maids of old, but passable,
As girls go now: nor am I much amaz'd
That Clinia doats upon her. But he has,
Alas, poor lad! a miserable, close,
Dry, covetous, curmudgeon to his father:
Our neighbour here; d'ye know him?---Yet, as if
He did not roll in riches, his poor son
Was forc'd to run away for very want.

* The old age of an eagle.] Most probably a proverb, signifying a vigorous and lusty old age, like that of the eagle; who, as naturalists say, never dies of old age, and preserves its life by perpetual drinking.

DACIER. PATRICK.

† Not like the maids of old, &c.] Ita non ut olim, &c. This is certainly the true meaning of the sentence. Syrus artfully flatters the vanity of Chremes; old men are generally apt to think every thing they have seen or heard in former times, far surpasses the productions of the present. DACIER.

D'ye know this story?

Chremes. Do I know it? Ay.

A scoundrel! should be horse-whipt.

Syrus. Who?

Chremes. That slave

Of Clinia's —

Syrus. Troth, I trembled for you, Syrus! [aside.

Chremes. Who suffer'd this.

Syrus. Why what should he have done?

Chremes. What?—have devis'd expedients, contriv'd schemes,
To raise the cash for the young gentleman
To make his mistress presents; and have done
A kindness to the old hunks against his will.

Syrus. You jest.

Chremes. Not I: it was his duty, Syrus.

Syrus. How's this? why prithee then, d'ye praise those Who trick their masters? [slaves,

Chremes. Yes, upon occasion.

Syrus. Mighty fine, truly!

Chremes. Why, it oft prevents
A great deal of uneasiness: for instance,
This Clinia, Menedemus' only son,
Would never have elop'd.

Syrus. I cannot tell,

Whether

Whether he fays all this in jeft or earneft;
But it gives freſh encouragement to Me. [afide.]

Chremes. And now what is't the blockhead waits for, Syrus?
Is't, till his maſter runs away again,
When he perceives himſelf no longer able
To bear with the expences of his miſtreſs?
Has he no plot upon th' old gentleman?

Syrus. He's a poor creature.

Chremes. But it is your part,
For Clinia's ſake, to lend a helping hand.

Syrus. Why that indeed I eaſily can do,
If you command me; for I know which way.

Chremes. I take you at your word.

Syrus. I'll make it good.

Chremes. Do ſo.

Syrus. But hark ye, Sir! remember this,
If ever it hereafter comes to paſs,
---As who can anſwer for th' affairs of men?
That your own ſon ——

Chremes. I hope 'twill never be.

Syrus. I hope ſo too; nor do I mention this,
From any knowledge or ſuſpicion of him:
But that in caſe---his time of life, you know;
And ſhould there be occaſion, truſt me, Chremes,

But

But I could handle you most handsomely.

Chremes. Well, well, we'll think of it, when that time comes.
Now to your present task! [Exit Chremes.]

S C E N E IV.

S Y R U S alone.

I never heard
My master argue more commodiously;
Nor ever had a mind to mischief, when
It might be done with more impunity.
But who's this coming from our house?

S C E N E V.

Enter CLITIPHO, and CHREMES following.

Chremes. How now?
What manners are these, Clitipho? Does this Become you?

Clit. What's the matter?

Chremes. Did not I
This very instant see you put your hand
Into yon wench's bosom?

M m

Syrus.

Syrus. So! all's over:

I am undone. [aside.

Clit. Me, Sir?

Chremes. These very eyes

Beheld you: don't deny it.---'Tis base in you,
To be so flippant with your hands. For what Affront's more gross, than to receive a friend
Under your roof, and tamper with his mistress?
And last night in your cups too how indecent,
And rudely you behav'd!

Syrus. 'Tis very true.

Chremes. So very troublesome, so help me heav'n,
I fear'd the consequence. I know the ways
Of lovers: they oft take offence at things,
You dream not of.

Clit. But my companion, Sir,
Is confident I would not wrong him.

Chremes. Granted.

Yet you should cease to hang for ever on them.
Withdraw, and leave them sometimes to themselves.
Love has a thousand fallies; you restrain them.
I can conjecture from myself. There's none,
How near soever, Clitipho, to whom
I dare lay open all my weaknesses.

With

With one my pride forbids it, with another
The very action shames me: and believe me,
It is the same with Him; and 'tis our place
To mark on what occasions to indulge him.

Syrus. What says He now? [aside.

Clit. Confusion!

Syrus. Clitipho,

These are the very precepts that I gave you:
And how discreet and temperate you've been!

Clit. Prithee, peace!

Syrus. Ay, I warrant you.

Chremes. Oh, Syrus,
I'm quite aham'd of him.

Syrus. I do not doubt it.
Nor without reason; for it troubles Me.

Clit. Still, rascal?

Syrus. Nay, I do but speak the truth.

Clit. May I not then go near them?

Chremes. Prithee, then,
Is there one way alone of going near them?

Syrus. Confusion! he'll betray himself, before
I get the money. [aside.]---Chremes, will you once
Hear a fool's counsel?

Chremes. What do you advise?

Syrus. Order your son about his business.

Clit. Whither?

Syrus. Whither? where'er you please. Give place to Them.
Go, take a walk.

Clit. Walk! where?

Syrus. A pretty question!
This, that, or any way.

Chremes. He says right. Go!

Clit. Now, plague upon you, Syrus! [going.]

Syrus to Clit. going.] Henceforth, learn
To keep those hands of yours at rest. [Exit. Clit.]

S C E N E VI.

D'ye mind?

What think you, Chremes, will become of him,
Unless you do your utmost to preserve,
Correct and counsel him?

Chremes. I'll take due care.

Syrus. But now's your time, Sir, to look after him.

Chremes. It shall be done.

Syrus. It must be, if you're wise:
For ev'ry day he minds me less and less.

Chremes. But, Syrus, say, what progress have you made
In that affair I just now mention'd to you?

Have

Have you struck out a scheme, that pleases you ?

Or are you still to seek ?

Syrus. The plot, you mean,
On Menedemus. I've just hit on one.

Chremes. Good fellow ! prithee now, what is't ?

Syrus. I'll tell you.

But as one thing brings in another ——

Chremes, Well ?

Syrus. This Bacchis is a sad jade.

Chremes. So it seems.

Syrus. Ay, Sir, if you knew all ! nay, even now
She's hatching mischief.——Dwelling hereabouts,
There was of late an old Corinthian woman,
To whom this Bacchis lent a thousand pieces.

Chremes. What then ?

Syrus. The woman's dead ; and left behind
A daughter, very young, whom she bequeath'd,
By way of pledge, to Bacchis for the money.

Chremes. I understand.

Syrus. This girl came here with Bacchis,
And now is with your wife. *

* And now is with your wife.] Antiphila is shortly to be acknowledged as the daughter of Chremes. She is not therefore in company with the other women at the feast, who were no other than courtezans, but with the wife of Chremes, and consequently free from reproach or scandal. DACIER.

Chremes. What then?

Syrus. She begs

Of Clinia to advance the cash; for which She'll give the girl as an equivalent.

She wants the thousand pieces.

Chremes. Does she so?

Syrus. No doubt on't.

Chremes. So I thought.---And what do you Intend to do?

Syrus. Who? I, Sir? I'll away
To Menedemus presently; and tell him
This maiden is a rich and noble captive,
Stolen from Caria; and to ransom her
Will greatly profit him.

Chremes. 'Twill never do.

Syrus. How so?

Chremes. I answer now for Menedemus.
I will not purchase her. What say you now?

Syrus. Give a more favourable answer!

Chremes. No,
There's no occasion.*

Syrus.

* There's no occasion.] Chremes is not allowed here to explain himself, being prevented by the coming of his wife; nor have any of the commentators given themselves the trouble to do it for him. What seems most probable to me is this. He finds that Bacchis

Syrus. No occasion?

Chremes. No.

Syrus. I cannot comprehend you.

Chremes. I'll explain.

---But hold! what now? whence comes it, that our door
Opens so hastily?

S C E N E VII.

Enter at a distance SOSTRATA with a Ring, and the Nurse.

Sofra. Or I'm deceiv'd,
Or this is certainly the very ring;
The ring, with which my daughter was expos'd.

Chremes to Syrus behind.] What can those words mean, Syrus?

Bacchis makes a demand of ten minæ, and offers Antiphila as a pledge for it; a bargain by which he was sure to lose nothing, and wherein Bacchis could not deceive him, the girl being already in his possession. It is therefore likely that he intended to advance the money on those conditions himself.

DACIER.

The above conjecture of Madam Dacier would be a very ingenious way of accounting for a man's conduct in these circumstances in real life; but in a play where the source of every action is industriously laid open by the poet, had this been the intention of Chremes, I should think it would have been express'd, and the motive, that influenced him to it, also assigned. The following note on this scene gives a much better account of this conference between Chremes and Syrus, and shews of how much use it is in the ensuing part of the fable.

“ Syrus pretends to have concerted this “ plot against Menedemus, in order to trick “ him out of some money to be given to “ Clinia's supposed mistress. Chremes, how“ ever, does not approve of this: yet it serves
“ to carry on the plot; for when Antiphila “ proves afterwards to be the daughter of “ Chremes, he necessarily becomes the debtor
“ of Bacchis, and is obliged to lay down the “ sum for which he imagines his daughter was “ pledged.” EUGRAPHIUS.

Sofra.

Soфра. Tell me, Nurse!

Does it appear to you to be the same?

Nurse. Ay, marry: and the very moment that
You shew'd it me, I said it was the same.

Soфра. But have you thoroughly examin'd, Nurse?

Nurse. Ay, thoroughly.

Soфра. In then, and let me know

If she has yet done bathing; and meanwhile

I'll wait my husband here. [Exit Nurse.

Syrus. She wants you, Sir! enquire,

What she would have. She's grave, I know not why.

'Tis not for nothing; and I fear the cause.

Chremes. The cause? pshaw! nothing. She'll take mighty
To be deliver'd of some mighty trifle. [pains

Soфра. seeing them.] Oh husband!

Chremes. Oh Wife!

Soфра. I was looking for you.

Chremes. Your pleasure?

Soфра. First, I must intreat you then,
Believe, I would not dare do any thing
Against your order.

Chremes. What! must I believe
A thing past all belief?---I do believe it.

Syrus. This exculpation bodes some fault, I'm sure. [aside.
Soфра.

Soфра. Do you remember, I was pregnant once,
When you assur'd me with much earnestness,
That if I were deliver'd of a girl,
You would not have the child brought up?

Chremes. I know
What you have done. You have brought up the child.

Syrus. Madam, if so, my master gains a loss.*

Soфра. No, I have not: but there was at that time
An old Corinthian woman dwelling here,
To whom I gave the child to be expos'd.

Chremes. O Jupiter! Was ever such a fool!

Soфра. Ah, what have I committed?

Chremes. What committed?

Soфра. If I've offended, Chremes, 'tis a crime
Of ignorance, and nothing of my purpose.

Chremes. Own it, or not, I know it well enough,
That ignorantly, and imprudently,

* Madam, if so, my master gains a loss.]
Si sic factum est, domina, ergo herus DAMNO AUCTUS est. The most indifferent parts of an author commonly give the most trouble.
The sense of the original being somewhat dark, and the best construction not very elegant, several attempts have been made to amend and alter the text. In this, as in most other cases, I believe the common reading to be the right; and that it contains nothing more than a conceit from the slave, founded on the words damno auctus, which I have endeavoured to render in the manner of the original, gains a loss. Some think by his master is meant Clitipho, others Chremes.

Eugraphius explains the words to signify that Clitipho will be a loser by a new-found sister, who will be co-heiress; and others will have them to imply the loss to be suffained by Chremes in paying Antiphila's portion.

You do and say all things: how many faults
 In this one action are you guilty of?
 For first, had you complied with my commands,
 The girl had been dispatch'd; * and not her death
 Pretended, and hopes given of her life.
 But that I do not dwell upon: You'll cry,
 ---Pity,---a mother's fondness.---I allow it.
 But then how rarely you provided for her!
 What could you mean? consider!---for 'tis plain,
 You have betray'd your child to that old beldam,
 Either for prostitution, or for sale.
 So she but liv'd, it was enough, you thought:
 No matter how, or what vile life she led.
 ---What can one do, or how proceed, with those,
 Who know of neither reason, right, nor justice?
 Better or worse, for or against, they see
 Nothing but what they list.

Softly. My dearest Chremes,
 I own I have offended: I'm convinc'd.
 But since you're more experienc'd than myself,

* The girl had been dispatch'd.] One cannot avoid being seized with a kind of horror, to think that, in a country so polite as Greece, men should be so barbarous, as to murder their own children without remorse, when they imagined it to be for the interest of their family. Philosophy had long before this demonstrated the horror, not only of these murders, but even of exposing children. But philosophy is always weak and unavailing, when opposed to customs authorized by long usage. PATRICK.

I pray you be the more indulgent too,
And let my weakness shelter in your justice.

Chremes. Well, well, I pardon you : but, Sostrata,
Forgiving you thus easily, I do
But teach you to offend again. But come,
Say, wherefore you begun this ?

Sostra. As we women
Are generally weak and superstitious,
When first to this Corinthian old woman
I gave the little infant, from my finger
I drew a ring, and charg'd her to expose
That with my daughter : that if chance she died,
* She might have part of our possessions with her.

Chremes. † 'Twas right : you thus preserv'd yourself and her.

Sostra. This is that ring.

Chremes. Where had it you ?

* She might have part of our possessions.] The ancients imagined they were guilty of a most heinous crime, if they suffered their children to die, without having possessed some part of their fortune : the women therefore, who are generally superstitious, when they exposed their children, put some jewel or other trinket among their cloaths, by this means thinking to discharge their claim of inheritance, and to clear their own conscience.

DACIER.

† 'Twas right : you thus preserv'd, &c.] The meaning of this passage is this. Chremes tells his wife, that by having given this ring, she had done two good acts instead of one ; she had cleared her conscience, and preserved her child ; for had there been no ring or other token among the infant's things, the finder would scarce have been at the trouble of taking care of her, but might have left her to perish, never suspecting she would ever be enquired after, or themselves liberally rewarded for their pains of preserving her.

DACIER.

Soфра. The girl
That Bacchis brought with her ——

Syrus. Ha! [aside.

Chremes. What says she?

Soфра. Desir'd I'd keep it while she went to bathe.
I took no notice on't at first; but I
No sooner look'd on't, than I knew't again,
And strait ran out to you.

Chremes. And what d'ye think,
Or know concerning her?

Soфра. I cannot tell,
Till you enquire of herself, and find,
If possible, from whence she had the ring.

Syrus. Undone! I see more hope than I desire. †
She's our's, if this be so. [aside.

Chremes. Is she alive
To whom you gave the child?

Soфра. I do not know.

Chremes. What did she tell you formerly?

Soфра. That she

* While she went to bathe.] Hedelin is grossly mistaken in saying that Antiphila bathed during the fourth act. It is so far from true, that, in the beginning of this scene, Soфраta sends the nurse to see if Antiphila was not already come out of the bath. DACIER.

† Undone! &c.] Syrus is alarmed, fearing that, by the discovery of Antiphila, their plot on Menedemus would be baffled, and their imposition on Chremes detected.

EUGRAPHIUS.

Had done what I commanded her.

Chremes. Her name ;

That we may make enquiry.

Sostrata. Philtere.

Syrus. The very same ! she's found, and I am lost. [aside.

Chremes. In with me, Sostrata !

Sostrata. Beyond my hopes.

How much I fear'd you should continue still

So rigidly inclin'd, as formerly,

When you refus'd to educate her, Chremes !

Chremes. Men cannot always be, as they desire, *

But must be govern'd by their fortunes still.

The times are alter'd with me, and I wish

To have a daughter now ; then, nothing less. †

* Men cannot always, &c.] This he says by way of palliating the cruelty of his former orders to put the child to death. Dacier.

† Then nothing less.] Here ends the act, and, by the discovery of Antiphila, to all appearance, the main story of the piece. The following observation on the great art of our poet, in continuing it through two acts more, is extremely just and ingenious.

“ What would become of the piece which Terence has called the Self-Tormentor, if the poet, by an extraordinary effort of genius, had not contrived to take up the story of Clinia anew, and to weave it in with the intrigue of Clitipho ?”

DIDEROT.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

SYRUS alone.

MY mind misgives me, my defeat is nigh.*
 This unexpected incident has driven
 My forces into such a narrow pass,
 I cannot even handsomely retreat
 Without some feint, to hinder our old man
 From seeing that this wench is Clitipho's.
 As for the money, and the trick I dreamt of,
 Those hopes are flown, and I shall hold it triumph,
 So I but 'scape a scouring.—Curst Fortune,
 To have so delicate a morsel snatch'd
 Out of my very jaws!—What shall I do?

* My mind, &c.] Madam Dacier, and most of the later critics who have implicitly followed her, tell us that, in the interval between the third and fourth acts, Syrus has been present at the interview between Chremes and Antiphila within. The only difficulty in this doctrine is how to reconcile to it the apparent ignorance of Syrus, which he discovers at the entrance of Clinia. But this objection, says she, is easily answered. Syrus having partly heard Antiphila's story, and finding things take an unfavourable turn, retires to consider what is best to be done. But surely this is a most unnatural impatience at so critical a juncture: and after all, would it not be better to take up the matter just where Terence has left it, and to suppose that Syrus knew nothing more of the affair than what might be collected from the late conversation between Chremes and Sostrata, at which we know he was present; and which at once accounts for his apprehensions, which he betrayed even during that scene, as well as for his imperfect knowledge of the real state of the case, till apprized of the whole by Clinia?

What

What new device? for I must change my plan.
 —Nothing so difficult, but may be won
 By industry.—Suppose, I try it thus. [thinking.
 —'Twill never do.—Or thus?—No better still.
 But thus I think.—No, no.—Yes, excellent!
 Courage! I have it.—Good!—Good!—Best of all!—
 —'Faith, I begin to hope to lay fast hold
 Of that same slipp'ry money after all.

S C E N E II.

Enter CLINIA at another part of the Stage.

Clin. Henceforward, Fate, do with me what thou wilt!
 Such is my joy, so full and absolute,
 I cannot know vexation. From this hour
 To you, my father, I resign myself,
 Content to be more frugal than you wish! [knowledg'd;
Syrus, overhearing.] 'Tis just as I suppos'd. The girl's ac-
 His raptures speak it so.---[going up.] I'm overjoy'd,
 That things have happen'd to your wish.

Clin. O Syrus!
 Have You then heard it too?

Syrus. I heard it? Ay:

I, who

I, who was present at the very time !

Clin. Was ever any thing so lucky ?

Syrus. Nothing.

Clin. Now, heav'n so help me, I rejoice at this
On her account much rather than my own,
Her, whom I know worthy the highest honours.

Syrus. No doubt on't.---But now, Clinia, hold awhile !
Give me a moment's hearing in my turn.
For your friend's business must be thought of now,
And well secur'd ; lest our old gentleman
Suspect about the wench.

Clin. O Jupiter ! [in raptures,

Syrus. Peace ! [impatiently.

Clin. My Antiphila shall be my wife.

Syrus. And will you interrupt me ?

Clin. Oh, my Syrus,
What can I do ? I'm overjoy'd. Bear with me.

Syrus. Troth, so I do.

Clin. We're happy, as the Gods.

Syrus. I lose my labour on you.

Clin. Speak ; I hear.

Syrus. Ay, but you don't attend.

Clin. I'm all attention.

Syrus. I say then, Clinia, that your friend's affairs

Muft be attended to, and well fecur'd :
For if you now depart abruptly from us,
And leave the wench upon our hands, my mafter
Will instantly difcover, ſhe belongs
To Clitipho. But if you take her off,
It will remain, as ftill it is, a ſecret.

Clin. But, Syrus, this is flatly oppoſite
To what I moſt devoutly wiſh, my marriage.
For with what face ſhall I accoſt my father ?
D'ye underſtand me ?

Syrus. Ay.

Clin. What can I ſay ?
What reaſon can I give him ?

Syrus. Tell no lie.
Speak the plain truth.

Clin. How ?

Syrus. Every ſyllable.
Tell him your paſſion for Antiphila ;
Tell him you wiſh to marry her, and tell him,
Bacchis belongs to Clitipho.

Clin. 'Tis well,
In reaſon, and may eaſily be done :
And then beſides you'd have me win my father,
To keep it hid from your old gentleman.

Syrus. No ; rather to prevail on him, to go

And tell him the whole truth immediately.

Clin. How? are you mad, or drunk? You'll be the ruin
Of Clitipho: for how can he be safe?
Eh, Sirrah!

Syrus. That's my masterpiece: This plot
Is my chief glory, and I'm proud to think
I have such force, such pow'r of cunning in me,
As to be able to deceive them both,
By speaking the plain truth: that when your father
Tells Chremes, Bacchis is his own son's mistress,
He shan't believe it.

Clin. But that way again
You blast my hopes of marriage: for while Chremes
Supposes her my mistress, he'll not grant
His daughter to me. You, perhaps, don't care,
So you provide for him, what comes of me.

Syrus. Why, plague! d'ye think I'd have you counterfeit
For ever? but a day, to give me time
To bubble Chremes of the money.---Peace!
Not an hour more.

Clin. Is that sufficient for you?
But then, suppose, his father find it out!

Syrus. * Suppose, as some folks say, the sky should fall!

Clin.

* Suppose,—the sky shou'd fall.] There is a remarkable passage in Arrian's account of Alexander, lib. 4. where he tells us that some ambassadors from the Celtæ, being asked Clin. Still I'm afraid.

Syrus. Afraid indeed! as if,
It was not in your pow'r, whene'er you pleas'd,
To clear yourself, and tell the whole affair.

Clin. Well, well, let Bacchis be brought over then!

Syrus. Well said! and here she comes.

S C E N E III.

Enter BACCHIS, PHRYGIA, &c. at another Part of the Stage.

Bacch. Upon my life,
This Syrus with his golden promises
Has fool'd me hither charmingly! Ten Minæ
He gave me full assurance of: but if
He now deceives me, come whene'er he will,
Canting and fawning to allure me hither,
It shall be all in vain; I will not stir.
Or when I have agreed, and fix'd a time, asked by Alexander, what in the world they dreaded most, answered, Δεδιέναι, μηποτε ὁ οὐρανὸς αὐτοῖς ἐμπεσοί, "that they feared, lest the sky should fall." Alexander, who expected to hear himself named, was surpris'd at an answer, which signified that they thought themselves beyond the reach of all human power, plainly implying that nothing could hurt them, unless he would suppose impossibilities, or a total destruction of nature. PATRICK.

Of which he shall have giv'n his master notice,
 And Clitipho is all agog with hope,
 I'll fairly jilt them both, and not come near them;
 And master Syrus' back shall smart for it.

Clin. She promises you very fair.

Syrus. D'ye think

She jests? She'll do it, if I don't take heed.

Bacch. They sleep: i'faith, I'll rouse them.* Hark ye,
 Didst note the villa of Charinus, † which [Phrygia,
 That fellow just now shew'd us? [aloud.

Phry. I did, Madam.

Bacch. The next house on the right hand. [aloud.

Phry. I remember.

Bacch. Run thither quickly: for the Captain spends
 The Dionysia there. [aloud.

Syrus, behind.] What means she now?

Bacch. Tell him I'm here; and fore against my will,
 Detain'd by force: but that I'll find some means
 To slip away and come to him. [aloud.

Syrus. Confusion!-- [comes forward.

* They sleep: i'faith I'll rouse them.] Dormiunt; ego pol istos commovebo. Hedelin interprets these words literally; but surely nothing can be more plain, from the whole tenor of the scene, than that they are merely metaphorical, as Menage justly argues.

† The villa of Charinus.] Villam Charini. This passage alone is a sufficient proof that the feast of Bacchis, mentioned in this play, was the Dionysia in the fields; and consequently that the scene is not laid in Athens, but in the country. DACIER.

Stay, Bacchis, Bacchis! where d'ye fend that girl?

Bid her stop!

Bacch. Go! [to Phrygia.

Syrus. The money's ready.

Bacch. Then

I stay. [Phrygia returns.

Syrus. This instant you shall have it, Bacchis.

Bacch. When you please; I don't press you.

Syrus. But d'ye know

What you're to do?

Bacch. Why, what?

Syrus. You must go over,

You and your equipage, to Menedemus.

Bacch. What are you at now, sauce-box?

Syrus. Coining money,

For your use, Bacchis.

Bacch. Do you think to play

Your jests on me?

Syrus. No; this is downright earnest.

Bacch. Are You the person I'm to deal with?

Syrus. No.

But there I'll pay the money.

Bacch. Let us go then!

Syrus. Follow her there.---Ho, Dromo!

S C E N E IV.

Enter D R O M O.Dromo. Who calls?Syrus. Syrus.Dromo. Your pleasure! What's the matter now?Syrus. Conduct.

All Bacchis' maids to your house instantly.

Dromo. Why so?

Syrus. No questions : let them carry over
 All they brought hither. Our old gentleman
 Will think himself reliev'd from much expence
 By their departure. Troth, he little knows,
 With how much loss this small gain threatens him.
 If you're wife, Dromo, know not what you know.

Dromo. I'm dumb.

[Exit Dromo, with Bacchis' servants and baggage into the house of Menedemus.]

S C E N E V.

After which, Enter C H R E M E S.

Chremes, to himself.] 'Fore heav'n, I pity Menedemus.
 His case is lamentable : to maintain

That

That jade and all her harlot-family !
 Altho' I know for some few days to come
 He will not feel it ; so exceedingly
 He long'd to have his son : but when he sees
 Such monstrous household-riot and expence
 Continue daily, without end or measure,
 He'll wish his son away from him again.

But yonder's Syrus in good time. [seeing Syrus.]

Syrus. I'll to him. [aside.]

Chremes. Syrus !

Syrus. Who's there ? [turning about.]

Chremes. What now ?

Syrus. The very man !

I have been wishing for you this long time.

Chremes. You seem to've been at work with the old man.

Syrus. What ! at our plot ? No sooner said, than done.

Chremes. Indeed !

Syrus. Indeed.

Chremes. I can't forbear to stroke

Your head for it. Good lad ! come nearer, Syrus !

I'll do thee some good turn for this. I will,

I promise you. [patting his head.]

Syrus. Ah, if you did but know

How luckily it came into my head !

Chremes.

Chremes. Pfhaw, are you vain of your good luck?

Syrus. Not I.

I speak the plain truth.

Chremes. Let me know it then.

Syrus. Clinia has told his father, that the wench
Is mistress to your Clitipho; and that
He brought her with him hither, to prevent
Your smoking it.

Chremes. Incomparable!

Syrus. Really?

Chremes. O, admirable!

Syrus. Ay, if you knew all.

But only hear the rest of our device.

He'll tell his father, he has seen your daughter,
Whose beauty has so charm'd him at first sight,
He longs to marry her.

Chremes. Antiphila?

Syrus. The same: and he'll request him to demand her
Of you in marriage.

Chremes. To what purpose, Syrus?

I don't conceive the drift on't.

Syrus. No! you're slow.

Chremes. Perhaps so.

Syrus. Menedemus instantly

Will furnish him with money for the wedding,
To buy——d'ye take me?

Chremes. Cloaths and jewels.

Syrus. Ay.

Chremes. But I will neither marry, nor betroth
My daughter to him.

Syrus. No? Why?

Chremes. Why!--is that
A question? to a wretch!——

Syrus. Well, as you please.
I never meant that he should marry her,
But only to pretend——

Chremes. I hate pretence.
Plot as you please, but do not render me
An engine in your rogueries. Shall I Contract my daughter, where I never can Consent to marry her?

Syrus. I fancied so.

Chremes. Not I.

Syrus. It might be done most dextrously :
And, in obedience to your strict commands,
I undertook this business.

Chremes. I believe it.

Syrus. However, Sir, I meant it well.

Chremes. Nay, nay,

Do't by all means, and spare no trouble in't;
But bring your scheme to bear some other way.

Syrus. It shall be done: I'll think upon some other.

---But then the money which I mention'd to you,
Owing to Bacchis by Antiphila,

Must be repaid her: and you will not now
Attempt to shift the matter off; or say,

“ ---What is't to me? Was I the borrower?

“ Did I command it? Could she pledge my daughter

“ Against my will?”——You can say none of this;

For 'tis a common saying, and a true,

* That strictest law is oft the highest wrong.

Chremes. I mean not to evade it.

Syrus. No, I'll warrant.

Nay You, tho' others did, could never think on't;

For all the world imagines you've acquir'd

A fair and handsome fortune.

Chremes. I will carry

* Strictest law is oft the highest wrong.] Summum jus, sæpe summa est malitia. This, as Syrus himself says, was a proverb. Menander probably made use of it in this very play, as the same sentiment is to be found among his fragments,

————— Καλον
Οι νομοι σφοδρ' εισιν· ο δ' ὁρων τις νομος
Λιαν ακριβως, συκοφαντης μοι φαινεται.

The law, 'tis true, is good and excellent;
But he who takes the letter of the law
Too strictly, is a pettyfogging knave.

The money to her instantly myself.

Syrus. No; rather send it by your son.

Chremes. Why so?

Syrus. Because he acts the part of her gallant.

Chremes. What then?

Syrus. Why then 'twill seem more probable,
If he presents it: I too shall effect
My scheme more easily.---And here he is.---
---In, Sir, and fetch the money out.

Chremes. I will. [Exit Chremes.]

S C E N E VI.

Enter CLITIPHO.

Clit. to himself.] Nothing so easy in itself, but when Perform'd against one's will, grows difficult.
This little walk, how easy! yet how faint
And weary it has made me!--and I fear
Left I be still excluded, and forbid
To come near Bacchis. [Seeing Syrus.]---Now all pow'rs above
Confound you, Syrus, for the trick you play'd me!
That brain of your's is evermore contriving
Some villainy to torture me withall.

Syrus. Away, you malapert ! Your frowardness
Had well nigh ruin'd me.

Clit. I would it had,
As you deserv'd !

Syrus. As I deserv'd !---How's that ?--- I faith I'm glad I heard you say so much
Before you touch'd the cash, that I was just About to give you.

Clit. Why, what can I say ?
You went away ; came back, beyond my hopes,
And brought my mistress with you ; then again
Forbad my touching her.

Syrus. Well, well, I can't
Be peevish with you now.---But do you know Where Bacchis is ?

Clit. At our house.

Syrus. No.

Clit. Where then ?

Syrus. At Clinia's.

Clit. Then I'm ruin'd.

Syrus. Courage, man !
You shall go to her instantly, and carry
The money that you promis'd her.

Clit. Fine talk !

Where should I get it?

Syrus. From your father.

Clit. Pfhaw!

You play upon me.

Syrus. The event shall shew.

Clit. Then I am blest indeed. Thanks, thanks, dear Syrus!

Syrus. Hift! here's your father.---Have a care! don't seem Surpriz'd at any thing: give way in all:

Do as he bids, and say but little. Mum!

S C E N E VII.

Enter CHREMES.

Chremes. Where's Clitipho?

Syrus, to Clit.] Here, say.

Clit. Here, Sir!

Chremes. Have You

Inform'd him of the business? [to Syrus.

Syrus. In good part.

Chremes. Here, take the money then, and carry it. [to Clit.

Syrus. Plague, how you stand, log!---take it.

Clit. Give it me. [awkwardly.

Syrus. Now in with me immediately!---You, Sir, [to Chremes.

Be pleas'd meanwhile to wait our coming here ;
 There's nothing to detain us very long. [Ex. Clit. and Syrus.]

S C E N E VIII.

CHREMES alone.

My daughter now has had Ten Minæ of me,
 Which I account laid out upon her board :
 Ten more her cloaths will come to : and moreover
 Two Talents for her portion.—How unjust,
 And absolute is custom !* I must now
 Leave every thing, and find a stranger out,
 On whom I may bestow the sum of wealth,
 Which I have so much labour'd to acquire.

S C E N E IX.

Enter MENEDEMUS.

Mene. to himself.] Oh son, how happy hast thou made thy Convinc'd of thy repentance ! [father,

* How unjust, and absolute is custom !] I am charmed with this sentiment, and still more with the good man's application of it. For in fact nothing can be more ridiculous, than that when a father bestows his daughter upon a man, he must also bestow part of his fortune with her. And as a proof, that custom only authorizes such a practice, in antient times the very contrary was the case, money and presents being given to the fathers by those who demanded their daughters in marriage. MADAM DACIER.

Chremes, overhearing.] How mistaken!

Mene. Chremes! I wish'd for you.---'Tis in your power,
And I beseech you do it, to preserve
My son, myself, and family.

Chremes. I'll do't.

Wherein can I oblige you?

Mene. You to-day
Have found a daughter.

Chremes. True. What then?

Mene. My Clinia
Begs your consent to marry her.

Chremes. Good heaven!
What kind of man are you?

Mene. What mean you, Chremes?

Chremes. Has it then slipt your memory so soon,
The conversation that we had together,
Touching the rogueries they should devise,
To trick you of your money?

Mene. I remember.

Chremes. This is the trick.

Mene. How, Chremes? I'm deceiv'd.
'Tis as you say. From what a pleasing hope
Have I then fall'n!

Chremes.

Chremes. And she, I warrant you, *
Now at your house, is my son's mistress? Eh!

Mene. So they say.

Chremes. What! and you believ'd it?

Mene. All.

Chremes. ---And they say too he wants to marry her;
That soon as I've consented, you may give him
Money to furnish him with jewels, cloaths,
And other necessaries.

Mene. Ay, 'tis so:
The money's for his mistress.

Chremes. To be sure.

Mene. Alas, my transports are all groundless then.
---Yet I would rather bear with any thing,
Than lose my son again.---What answer, Chremes,
Shall I return with, that he mayn't perceive
I've found him out, and take offence?

Chremes. Offence!

You're too indulgent to him, Menedemus!

Mene. Allow me. I've begun, and must go through.
Do but continue to assist me.

* And she, I warrant you.] These two or three speeches are differently divided in different editions. I have followed that order, which seemed to me to create the most lively and natural dialogue.

Chremes. Say,

That we have met, and treated of the match.

Mene. Well; and what else?

Chremes. That I give full consent;

That I approve my son-in-law;—In short,

You may assure him also, if you please,

That I've betroth'd my daughter to him.

Mene. Good!

The thing I wanted.

Chremes. So shall he the sooner

Demand the money; you, as you desire,

The sooner give.

Mene. 'Tis my desire indeed.

Chremes. 'Troth, friend, as far as I can judge of this,

You'll soon be weary of your son again.

But as the case now stands, give cautiously,

A little at a time, if you are wise.

Mene. I will.

Chremes. Go in, and see what he demands.

If you shou'd want me, I'm at home.

Mene. 'Tis well.

For I shall let you know, do what I will.

[Exeunt severally.

A C T V. S C E N E I.

M E N E D E M U S alone.

TH A T I'm not over-wife, no conjurer,
 I know full well: but my assistant here,
 And counsellor, and grand comptroller Chremes,
 Outgoes me far: dolt, blockhead, ninny, ass;
 Or these, or any other common terms
 By which men speak of fools, besit Me well:
 But Him they suit not: His stupidity
 Is so transcendent, it exceeds them all.

S C E N E II.

Enter C H R E M E S.

Chremes, to Sofrata within.] Nay prithee, good wife, cease to stun the Gods
 With thanking them that you have found your daughter;
 Unless you fancy they are like yourself,
 And think, they cannot understand a thing

Unless

Unless said o'er and o'er a hundred times. [Syrus

—But meanwhile [coming forward.] wherefore do my son and Loiter so long?

Mene. Who are those loiterers, Chremes?

Chremes. Ha, Menedemus, are You there?—Inform me,
Have you told Clinia what I said?

Mene. The whole.

Chremes. And what said he?

Mene. Grew quite transported at it,
Like those who wish for marriage.

Chremes. Ha! ha! ha!

Mene. What do you laugh at?

Chremes. I was thinking of
The cunning rogueries of that slave, Syrus. [laughing.

Mene. Oh, was That it?

Chremes. Why, he can form and mould
The very visages of men, a rogue! [laughing.

Mene. Meaning my son's well-acted transport?

Chremes. Ay. [laughing.

Mene. The very same thing I was thinking of.

Chremes. A subtle villain! [laughing.

Mene. Nay, if you knew more,
You'd be still more convinc'd on't.

Chremes. Say you so?

Mene. Ay; do but hear.

Chremes, laughing.] Hold! hold! inform me first
How much you're out of pocket. For as soon
As you inform'd your son of my consent,
Dromo, I warrant, gave you a broad hint,
That the bride wanted jewels, cloaths, attendants;
That you might pay the money.

Mene. No.

Chremes. How? No?

Mene. No, I say..

Chremes. What! nor Clinia?

Mene. Not a word;

But only prest the marriage for to-day.

Chremes. Amazing!—But our Syrus? Did not He Throw in a word or two?

Mene. Not he.

Chremes. How so?

Mene. Faith, I can't tell: but I'm amaz'd that you,
Who see so clearly into all the rest,
Shou'd stick at this.—But that arch villain Syrus
Has form'd and moulded your son too so rarely,
That nobody can have the least suspicion,
That this is Clinia's mistress.

Chremes. How?

Mene. I pass

Their kisses and embraces. All that's nothing.

Chremes.

Chremes. What is there more that he can counterfeit?

Mene. Ah! [smiling.]

Chremes. What d'ye mean?

Mene. Nay, do but hear. I have
A private snug apartment, a back-room,
* Whither a bed was brought and made.

Chremes. What then?

Mene. No sooner done, than in went Clitipho.

Chremes. Alone?

Mene. Alone.

Chremes. I tremble.

Mene. Bacchis follow'd.

Chremes. Alone?

Mene. Alone.

Chremes. Undone!

Mene. No sooner in,
But they made fast the door.

Chremes. Ha! And was Clinia
Witness to this?

Mene. He was.—Both He and I.

* Whether a bed was BROUGHT, &c.] Peter Nannius observes that the beds among the antients were portable, and produces a passage from the Odyssey, wherein Penelope orders the marriage-bed to be produced, to try whether Ulysses was really her husband, or an impostor, by his manner of acknowledging it; because this bed was formed out of the trunk of an olive, wrought into the apartment itself, and therefore, contrary to the nature of other beds, could not be removed.

WESTERHOVIUS.

Chremes. Bacchis is my son's mistress, Menedemus !
I'm ruin'd.

Mene. Why d'ye think so?

Chremes. Mine is scarce
A Ten-days family.

Mene. What ! are you dismay'd
Because he sticks so closely to his friend ?

Chremes. Friend ! His She-friend.

Mene. If so ——

Chremes. Is that a doubt ?
Is any man so courteous, and so patient,
As tamely to stand by, and see his mistress—

Mene. Ha, ha, ha ! Why not ?—That I, you know,
Might be more easily impos'd upon. [ironically.]

Chremes. D'ye laugh at me ? I'm angry with myself :
And well I may. How many circumstances
Conspir'd to make it gross and palpable,
Had I not been a stone !—What things I saw !
Fool, fool !—But by my life I'll be reveng'd ;
For now ——

Mene. And can't you then contain yourself ?
Have you no self-respect ? And am not I
A full example for you ?

Chremes. Menedemus,

My anger throws me quite beside myself.

Mene. That you should talk thus! Is it not a shame
To be so liberal of advice to others,
So wise abroad, and poor in sense at home?

Chremes. What shall I do?

Mene. That which but even now *
You counsell'd me to do: Give him to know
That you're indeed a father: let him dare
Trust his whole soul to you, seek, ask of you;
Left he to others have recourse, and leave you.

Chremes. And let him go; go where he will; much rather Than here by his extravagance reduce
His father to distress and beggary.
For if I should continue to supply
The course of his expences, Menedemus,
Your desp'rate rakes wou'd be my lot indeed.

Mene. Ah, to what evils you'll expose yourself,
Unless you're cautious! You will seem severe,
And yet forgive him afterwards, and then
With an ill grace too.

Chremes. Ah, you do not know

* That which but even now you counsell'd me.]
One of the great beauties of this scene consists in Chremes' retorting on Menedemus the very advice given by himself at the beginning of the piece. DACIER.

How much this grieves me.

Mene. Well, well, take your way.

But tell me, do you grant me my request
That this your new-found daughter wed my son?
Or is there ought more welcome to you?

Chremes. Nothing.

The son-in-law, and the alliance please me.

Mene. What portion shall I tell my son you've settled?
Why are you silent?

Chremes. Portion!

Mene. Ay, what portion?

Chremes. Ah!

Mene. Fear not, Chremes, tho' it be but small:
The portion nothing moves us.

Chremes. I propos'd,
According to my fortune, that Two Talents
Were full sufficient: But you now must say,
If you'd save me, my fortune, and my son,
That I have settled all I have upon her.

Mene. What mean you?

Chremes. Counterfeit amazement too,
And question Clitipho my reason for it.

Mene. Nay, but I really do not know your reason.

Chremes. My reason for it?—That his wanton mind,

Now

Now flush'd with lux'ry and lasciviousness,
 I may o'erwhelm: and bring him down so low,
 He may not know which way to turn himself.

Mene. What are you at?

Chremes. Allow me! let me have My own way in this business.

Mene. I allow you.

It is your pleasure?

Chremes. It is.

Mene. Be it so.

Chremes. Come then, let Clinia haste to call the bride.
 And for this son of mine, he shall be school'd,
 As children ought.—But Syrus!——

Mene. What of him?

Chremes. What! I'll so handle him, so curry him,
 That while he lives he shall remember me. [* Exit Menedemus.
 What make a jest of me? a laughing-stock?
 Now, afore heav'n, he would not dare to treat
 A poor lone widow, as he treated me.

* Exit Menedemus.] The departure of Menedemus here is very abrupt, seeming to be in the midst of a conversation; and his re-entrance with Clitipho, already supposed to be apprized of what had past between the two old gentlemen, is equally precipitate. Menage imagines that some verses are lost here. Madam Dacier strains hard to defend the poet, and fills up the void of time by her old expedient of making the audience wait to see Chremes walk impatiently to and fro, till a sufficient time is elapsed for Menedemus to have given Clitipho a summary account of the cause of his father's anger. The truth is, that a too strict observance of Unity of Place will necessarily produce such absurdities; and there are several other instances of the like nature in Terence.

S C E N E III.

Re-enter MENEDEMUS with CLITIPHO and SYRUS.

Clit. And can it, Menedemus, can it be,
My father has so suddenly cast off
All natural affection? for what act?
What crime, alas, so heinous have I done?
It is a common failing.

Mene. This, I know,
Should be more heavy and severe to you
On whom it falls: and yet am I no less
Affected by it, tho' I know not why,
And have no other reason for my grief,
But that I wish you well.

Clit. Did not you say
My father waited here?

Mene. Ay; there he is. [Exit Menedemus.

Chremes. Why d'ye accuse your father, Clitipho?
Whate'er I've done, was providently done
Tow'rd you and your imprudence. When I saw
Your negligence of soul, and that you held

The pleasures of to-day your only care,
Regardless of the morrow; I found means
That you shou'd neither want, nor waste my substance.
When You, whom fair succession first made heir,
Stood self-degraded by unworthiness,
I went to those the next in blood to you,
Committing and consigning all to Them.
There shall your weakness, Clitipho, be sure
Ever to find a refuge; food, and raiment,
And roof to fly to.

Clit. Ah me!

Chremes. Better thus,
Than, you being heir, for Bacchis to have all.

Syrus. Distraction! what disturbances have I,
Wretch that I am, all unawares created!

Clit. Wou'd I were dead!

Chremes. Learn first, what 'tis to live.
When you know That, if life displeases you,
Then talk of dying.

Syrus. Master, may I speak?

Chremes. Speak.

Syrus. But with safety?

Chremes. Speak.

Syrus. How wrong is this,

Or rather what extravagance and madnefs,
To punifh him for my offence!

Chremes. Away!

Do not you meddle. No one blames you, Syrus!
Nor need you to provide a fanctuary,
Or interceffor.

Syrus. What is it you do?

Chremes. I am not angry, nor with you, nor him:
Nor fhould you take offence at what I do.

[Exit Chremes.

S C E N E IV.

Syrus. He's gone. Ah, wou'd I'd ask'd him ——

Clit. Ask'd what, Syrus?

Syrus. Where I fhould eat, fince he has caft us off.
You, I perceive, are quarter'd on your fifter.

Clit. Is't come to this, that I fhould be in fear
Of ftarving, Syrus?

Syrus. So we do but live,
There's hope ——

Clit. Of what?

Syrus. That we fhall have rare ftomachs.

Clit. D'ye jeft at fuch a time as this;

And

And lend me no assistance by your counsel?

Syrus. Nay, I was studying for you even now,
And was so all the while your father spoke.

And far as I can understand this——

Clit. What?

Syrus. Stay, you shall have it presently. [thinking.

Clit. Well, what?

Syrus. Thus then: I don't believe that you're their son:

Clit. How, Syrus! are you mad?

Syrus. I'll speak my thoughts.

Be you the judge. While they had You alone,
While yet there was no other, nearer joy,
You they indulg'd, and gave with open hand:
But now a daughter's found, their real child,
A cause is found to drive you forth.

Clit. 'Tis like.

Syrus. Think you this fault so angers him?

Clit. I think not.

Syrus. Consider too; 'tis ever found, that mothers
Plead for their sons, and in the father's wrath
Defend them. 'Tis not so at present.

Clit. True.

What shall I do then, Syrus?

Syrus. Ask of them

310 THE SELF-TORMENTOR.

The truth of this fufpicion. Speak your thoughts.
If 'tis not fo, you'll fpeedily incline them
Both to compaffion; or, if fo, be told Whofe fon you are.

Clit. Your counfel's good. I'll do't.

S C E N E V.

S Y R U S alone.

* A lucky thought of mine! for Clitipho,
The lefs he hopes, fo much more eafily
Will he reduce his father to good terms.
Befides, who knows but he may take a wife;
No thanks to Syrus neither.—But who's here?
Chremes!—I'm off: for feeing what has paff,
I wonder that he did not order me
To be trufs'd up immediately. I'll hence
To Menedemus, and prevail on him
To intercede for me: as matters ftand,
I dare not truft to our old gentleman. [Exit Syrus.

* The art and address of this stratagem of Syrus is excellent, and cannot be fufficiently admired. DACIER.

S C E N E VI.

Enter CHREMES, SOSTRATA.

Sostra. Nay indeed, husband, if you don't take care,
You'll bring some kind of mischief on your son :
I can't imagine how a thought so idle
Could come into your head.

Chremes. Still, woman, still D'ye contradict me? Did I ever wish
For any thing in all my life, but you
In that same thing oppos'd me, Sostrata?
Yet now if I should ask, wherein I'm wrong,
Or wherefore I act thus, you do not know.
Why then d'ye contradict me, Simpleton?

Sostra. Not know?

Chremes. Well, well, you know : I grant it, rather Than hear your idle story o'er again.

Sostra. Ah, 'tis unjust in you to ask my silence
In such a thing as this.

Chremes. I do not ask it.
Speak if you will : I'll do it ne'ertheless.

Sostra. Will you?

Chremes.

Chremes. I will.

Sostrata. You don't perceive what harm
May come of this. He thinks himself a foundling.

Chremes. A foundling, say you?

Sostrata. Yes indeed, he does.

Chremes. Confess it to be true.

Sostrata. Ah, heav'n forbid!

Let our most bitter enemies do that!

Shall I disown my son, my own dear child?

Chremes. What! do you fear you cannot at your pleasure,
Produce convincing proofs that he's your own?

Sostrata. Is it, because my daughter's found, † you say this?

* He thinks himself a foundling.] Subditum se SUSPICATUR. It is odd enough that Madam Dacier changes the text here, according to an alteration of her father, and reads SUSPICETUR, He MAY think himself a foundling—and assigns as a reason for it, that Terence could not be guilty of the very impropriety which she undertook to vindicate in the preceding scene. I have followed the common reading; because Chremes, ordering her to confirm her son's suspicions, shews that he understood her words in a positive, not a potential, sense. Clitipho, on his entrance in the next scene, seems to renew a request already made; and it would be a poor artifice in the poet, and, as Patrick observes, below the genius of Terence, to make Sostrata apprehend that these would be her son's suspicions, before she had any reason to suppose so.

† Because my daughter's found.] Madam Dacier, as well as all the rest of the commentators, has stuck at these words. Most of them imagine she means to say, that the discovery of Antiphila is a plain proof that she is not barren. Madam Dacier supposes that she intimates such a proof to be easy, because Clitipho and Antiphila were extremely alike; which sense she thinks immediately confirmed by the answer of Chremes, I cannot agree with any of them, and think that the whole difficulty of the passage here, as in many other places, is entirely of their own making. Sostrata could not refer to the reply of Chremes, because she could not possibly tell what it would be: but her own speech is intended as an answer to his preceding one, which she takes as a sneer on her late wonderful discovery of a daughter; imagining that he means to insinuate, that she could at any time with equal ease make out the proofs of the birth of her son.—The elliptical mode of expression, so usual in Terence, together with the refinements of commentators, seem to have created all the obscurity.

Chremes.

Chremes. No : but because, a stronger reason far, —
 His manners so resemble yours, you may Easily prove him thence to be your son.
 He is quite like you : not a vice, whereof
 He is inheritor, but dwells in You :
 And such a son no mother but yourself
 Could have engender'd.—But he comes.—How grave !
 Look in his face, and you may guess his plight.

S C E N E VII.

Enter CLITIPHON.

Clit. O Mother, if there ever was a time
 When you took pleasure in me, or delight
 To call me son, beseech you, think of that ;
 Pity my present misery, and tell me
 Who are my real parents !

Sostra. My dear son,
 Take not, I beg, that notion to your mind,
 That you're an alien to our blood.

Clit. I am.

Sostra. Ah me ! and can you then demand me that ?
 So may you prosper after both, as you're

Of both the child! and if you love your mother:
Take heed henceforward that I never hear
Such words from you.

Chremes. And if you fear your father,
See that I never find such vices in you.

Clit. What vices?

Chremes. What? I'll tell you. Trifler, idler,
Cheat, drunkard, whoremaster, and prodigal.
---Think this, and think that you are our's.

Sostra. These words
Suit not a father.

Chremes. No, no, Clitipho,
* Tho' from my brain you had been born, as Pallas
Sprang, it is said, from Jupiter, I wou'd not Bear the disgrace of your enormities.

Sostra. The Gods forbid ——

Chremes. I know not for the Gods: †

I will

* Tho' from my brain, &c.] I cannot help considering this as a touch of comick anger. However, all the commentators are of a different opinion; and it is generally imagined that this is the passage alluded to by Horace, when he says in his Art of Poetry,

*Interdum tamen & vocem Comœdia tollit;
Iratuſque Chremes tumido delitigat ore.*

Yet Comedy sometimes her voice may raise,
And angry Chremes rail in swelling phrase.

FRANCIS.

† I know not for the Gods.] Nescio Deos. Lambinus, in his admirable letter to Charles the 9th, accuses Terence of impiety: but the charge is groundless. Nay, had Terence been ever so wicked, he would scarce have been so imprudent as to introduce impious expressions in a play which was to be licensed by the magistrates. Nescio Deos does not imply, I care not for the Gods, but, I know not what the Gods will do. This is farther confirmed by a passage in the fourth scene of the second act. Antiphila, in answer to what I will do all that lies in Me. You seek

 For parents, which you have: but what is wanting,
 Obedience to your father, and the means
 To keep what he by labour hath acquir'd,
 For That you seek not:---Did you not by tricks
 Ev'n to my presence introduce—I blush
 * To speak immodestly before your mother:
 But you by no means blush'd to do't.

Clit. Alas!

How hateful am I to myself! how much
 Am I ashamed! so lost, I cannot tell
 How to attempt to pacify my father.

S C E N E VIII.

Enter MENEDERMUS.

Mene. Now in good faith our Chremes plagues his son
 Too long and too severely, I come forth
 To reconcile him, and make peace between them.
 And there they are!

what Bacchis tells her of other women, says
Nescio alias, &c. For my own part (says she)
I know not what other women may do, &c.
 and not, I don't care for other women.

DACIER.

* To speak immodestly before your mother.
 The Greeks and Romans were remarkably polite in this particular. They would, upon no account whatever, express themselves in-decently before their wives. Religion, policy, and good manners forbid it. DACIER.

Chremes. Ha, Menedemus! wherefore
Is not my daughter summon'd? and the portion,
I fettled on her, ratified by You?

Sofra. Dear husband, I beseech you not to do it!

Clit. My father, I intreat you pardon me!

Mene. Forgive him, Chremes! let his pray'rs prevail!

Chremes. What! shall I then with open eyes bestow
My whole estate on Bacchis? I'll not do't.

Mene. We will prevent that. It shall not be so.

Clit. If you regard my life, forgive me, father!

Sofra. Do, my dear Chremes!

Mene. Do, I prithee now!
Be not obdurate, Chremes!

Chremes. Why is this?

I see I can't proceed as I've begun.

Mene. 'Tis as it shou'd be now.

Chremes. On this condition,
That he agrees to do what I think fit.

Clit. I will do ev'ry thing. Command me, father!

Chremes. Take a wife.

Clit. Father!

Chremes. Nay, Sir, no denial!

Mene. I take that charge upon me. He shall do't.

Chremes. But I don't hear a word of it from him.

Clit. Confusion!

Sostra. Do you doubt then, Clitipho?

Chremes. Nay, which he pleases.

Mene. He'll obey in all;

Whate'er you'd have him.

Sostra. This, at first, is grievous,
While you don't know it; when you know it, easy.

Clit. I'm all obedience, father!

Sostra. Oh my son,
I'll give you a sweet wife, that you'll adore,
Phanocrata's, our neighbour's daughter.

Clit. Her!

That red-hair'd, blear-ey'd, wide-mouth'd, hook-nof'd wench?
I cannot, father.

Chremes. Oh, how nice he is!
Would any one imagine it?

Sostra. I'll get you
Another then.

Clit. Well, well; since I must marry,
I know one pretty near my mind.

Sostra. Good boy!

Clit. The daughter of Archonides, our neighbour.

Sostra. Well chosen!

Clit. One thing, father, still remains.

Chremes. What?

Clit.

Clit. That you'd grant poor Syrus a full pardon
For all that he hath done on my account.

Chremes. * Be it so.—[to the Audience.] Farewell, Sirs, and clap
[your hands !

* Be it so.—&c.] Terence's comedy of the Self-Tormentor is from the beginning to the end a perfect picture of human life, but I did not observe in the whole one passage that could raise a laugh.

STEELE'S SPECTATOR, No. 502.

The idea of this drama [Comedy] is much enlarged beyond what it was in Aristotle's time; who defines it to be, an imitation of light and trivial actions, provoking ridicule. His notion was taken from the state and practice of the Athenian stage; that is, from the old or middle comedy, which answers to this description. The great revolution, which the introduction of the new comedy made in the drama, did not happen till afterwards. This proposed for its object, in general, the actions and characters of ordinary life; which are not, of necessity, ridiculous, but, as appears to every observer, of a mixt kind, serious, as well as ludicrous, and, within their proper sphere of influence, not unfrequently even important. This kind of imitation, therefore, now admits the serious; and its scenes, even without the least mixture of pleasantry, are entirely COMICK. Though the common run of laughers in our theatre are so little aware of the extension of this province, that I should scarcely have hazarded the observation, but for the authority of Terence, who hath confessedly very little of the pleasant in his drama. Nay, one of the most admired of his comedies hath the gravity, and, in some places, almost the solemnity of tragedy itself.

HURD'S Dissertation on the several Provinces of the Drama.

—Terence,—whether impelled by his native humour, or determined by his truer taste, mixed so little of the ridiculous in his comedy, as plainly shews, it might, in his opinion, subsist entirely without it. DITTO.

In the passages, selected from the ingenious and learned critick last cited, are these four positions. First, that Aristotle (who founded his notion of Comedy on the Margites of Homer, as he did that of Tragedy on the Iliad) had not so enlarged an idea of that kind of drama, as we have at this time, or as was entertained by the authors of the new comedy: Secondly, that this kind of imitation, even without the LEAST MIXTURE of pleasantry, is entirely COMICK: Thirdly, that Comedy might, in the opinion of Terence, subsist entirely without the RIDICULOUS: And fourthly, that the Self-Tormentor hath the gravity of tragedy itself.

The two first positions concerning Aristotle's idea of this kind of imitation, and the genius of Comedy itself, it is not necessary to examine at present; and indeed they are questions of too extensive a nature to be agitated in a fugitive note: But in regard to the two last positions, with all due deference to the learned critick, I will venture to assert that the authority of Terence cannot be fairly pleaded in confirmation of the doctrine, that Comedy may subsist without the least mixture of the pleasant or ridiculous. Terence, say the French criticks, fait rire au dedans, & Plaute au dehors. The humour of Terence is indeed of a more chaste and delicate complexion than that of Plautus, Jonson, or Moliere. There are also, it is true, many grave and affecting passages in his plays, which Horace in his rule of Interdum tamen, &c. and even “the common run of laughers in our theatre” allow and applaud in our gayest comedies.

medies. I cannot however think that he ever trespasses on the severity or solemnity of Tragedy: nor can I think that there are not touches of humour in every one of the plays, which he has left behind him; some humour of dialogue, more of character, and still more of comick situation, necessarily resulting from the artful contexture of his pieces. The Andrian, The Eunuch, The Brothers, and Phormio, especially the second and fourth, are confessedly pleasant comedies, and the Eunuch in particular the most favourite entertainment of the Roman theatre. Instances of humour have been produced, by the ingenious critick himself, even from the Step-Mother; and the ensuing notes will probably point out more. As to the present comedy, the Self-Tormentor, I should imagine that a man, with much less mercury in his composition than Sir Richard Steele, might have met with more than one or two passages in it that would raise a laugh. Terence indeed does not, like the player-clowns mentioned by Shakespeare's Hamlet, "set on the spectators to laugh, though in the mean time some necessary question of the play be to be considered." He never starts from the subject, merely to indulge himself in pleasantries, like Plautus and even Moliere, for whole scenes together. His humour always arises from the occasion, and flows from him in the natural course of the fable; in which he not only does not admit idle scenes, but scarce ever a speech that is not immediately conducive to the business of the drama. His humour, therefore, must necessarily lie close and compact, and requires the constant attention of the reader to the incidents that produce it, on which dramatick humour often in great measure depends; but would of course unfold itself in the representation, when those incidents were thrown into action. In the present comedy, the character of Syrus, bating the description in the second act, must be allowed to be wholly comick; and that of Chremes still more so. The conduct of the third and fourth acts is happily contrived for the production of mirth, and the situation of the two old men in the first scene of the fifth act is very pleasantly imagined. The deep distresses of Menedemus, with which the play opens, makes but a very inconsiderable part of Terence's comedy; and I am apt to think, as I have before hinted in another place, that the Self-Tormentor of Menander was a more capital and interesting character. As our poet has contrived, the self-punishment of Menedemus ends as soon as the play begins. The son returns in the very second scene; and the chief cause of the grief of Menedemus being removed, other incidents, and those of the most comick cast too, are worked into the play; which, in relation to the subject of it, might perhaps, with more propriety, have been entitled The Fathers, than The Self-Tormentor. I cannot therefore, notwithstanding the pathos and simplicity of the first scene, agree to the last position, "that this comedy hath the gravity of tragedy itself."

Brothers.

T H E
B R O T H E R S.

T t

T H E B R O T H E R S;

Acted at the Funeral Games of L. Æmilius Paulus, * Given by Q. Fabius Maximus, and P. Cornelius Africanus : † Principal Actors, L. Attilius Prænestinus, and Minutius Prothimus : The Musick, composed for Tyrian Flutes, ‡ by Flaccus, Freedman

* Lucius Æmilius Paulus,] Surnamed Macedonicus, because he had obtained a victory over Perseus king of Macedon; he died in the year of Rome 593, one hundred fifty-eight years before the nativity of Christ: he was so poor at the time of his decease, that they were constrained to sell his estate in order to pay his widow her dower. DACIER.

† Q. Fabius Maximus & P. Cornelius Africanus.] In some copies we read, Q. F. M. & P. C. A. Ædilibus Curulibus.—"Q. Fabius Maximus, & P. Cornelius Africanus, Curule Ædiles."—This, as Scaliger, and other commentators are of opinion, must be erroneous: for the children and relations of the deceased, and not the Ædiles, had always the direction of the funeral games. Besides, it is very certain, that P. C. Scipio Africanus, the son of Paulus Æmilius, never was Ædile, the Consulship having been conferred upon him the same year that he sued for the Ædileship, though not yet arrived at the usual age assigned for that high dignity; as we are told by Aurelius Victor in his little Treatise of Illustrious Men. And this event did not happen till twelve years after the death of his father and the representation of this play, Scipio being even then but thirty-six years of age, before which time no person could be elected Ædile.—

Muret corrected the title after an ancient MS. he had seen at Venice. The Q. Fabius Maximus & P. Cornelius Africanus here mentioned were the two sons of Æmilius Paulus, and had taken the surnames of the persons who had adopted them. This is undoubtedly the true reading. The Ædiles that year were Q. Fulvius Nobilior & L. Marcius.

DACIER.

* Tyrian flutes.] Tibiis Sarranis. Tyre by the ancient Phœnicians was called Sor; the Carthaginians, their descendants, called it Sar, from whence it came to be called Sarra. Sarranis therefore meant the same thing as Tyriis. These Tyrian flutes were the equal left-handed flutes, and always used upon joyful occasions.—And here arises a great difficulty, for how can we imagine that the children of Æmilius would have allowed such musick at their father's funeral? It is impossible. This title is not only corrupt, but defective: the true reading is Æta primum tibiis Lydiis, deinde TIBIIS SARRANIS. The Lydian flutes were grave and solemn, and consequently adapted to grave and solemn purposes. After the play had been acted at that solemnity, it was performed with left-handed flutes, and doubtless on some less mournful occasion. See the preface of Donatus to this comedy. DACIER.

Freedman to Claudius. Taken from the Greek of Menander. First acted, L. Anicius and M. Cornelius, Consuls.

Year of Rome - - 593

Before Christ - - 160

There is much ingenuity in the above note of Madam Dacier, who has plainly proved that the title to this play is defective; and so, there is great reason to think, are the titles to the rest of our author's comedies. Yet I cannot entirely agree with her, that such musick could not have been used at a funeral. The ancients, we know, admitted all kinds of games at such solemnities. The musick was most probably suited to the comedy, rather than to the occasion, on which it was exhibited: and Donatus, to whom she refers, tells us in express words, that it was so in the present instance. Modulata est autem tibiis dextris, id est, Lydiis, ob feriam gravitatem, quâ fere in omnibus comœdiis utitur hic poeta. Sæpe tamen, mutatis per scenam modis, cantica mutavit: quod significat titulus scenæ, habens subiectas personis literas M. M. C. "It was composed for right-handed flutes, that is, Lydian, because of the serious vein, which generally prevails in all our author's comedies; the musick however "was frequently varied in the course of the scene, as is shewn from the letters M. M. C. that is, mutatis modis cantici, "subjoined to the names of the characters." The learned reader, who will be at the pains to consult Madam Dacier, I believe will agree with me, that she has but partially cited, and inaccurately translated the above extract from the preface of Donatus.

I cannot conclude the notes on this title, without taking notice of the happy and elegant use made of the occasion, on which the play was first represented, by my late friend Lloyd, in his Prologue to this Comedy, when acted at Westminster school in the year 1759, soon after the melancholy news of the publick loss sustained by the death of that most eminent military character, General Wolfe. The learned reader, I dare say, will not be sorry to see it entire.

PROLOGUS in ADELPHOS, 1759.

Cum Patres Populumque dolor communis haberet,
Fleret et Æmilium Maxima Roma suum,
Funebres inter ludos, his dicitur ipſis
Scenis extinctum condecorâſſe ducem.
Ecquis adeſt, ſcenam nocte hæc qui ſpectet eandem,
Nec nobis luſtum ſentiet eſſe parem?
Utcunque arriſit pulchris victoria cœptis,
Qua Sol extremas viſit uterque plagas,
Succesſus etiam medio de fonte Britannis
Surgit amari aliquid, legitimumque dolor.
Si famæ generoſa fitis, ſi bellica virtus,
Ingenium felix, intemerata fides,
Difficiles laurus, ipſoque in flore juventæ
Heu! nimium lethi præcipitata dies, [jure
Si quid habent pulchrum hæc, vel ſi quid amabile,
Eſto tua hæc, WOLFI, laus, propriumque decus!
Nec moriere omnis.—Quin uſque corona vigebit,
Unanimis Britonum quam tibi neſcit amor.
Regia quin pietas marmor tibi nobile ponet,
Quod tua perpetuis prædicet acta notis.
Confluet huc ſtudio viſendi martia pubes,
Sentiet et flammâ corda calere pari;
Dumque legit mediis cecidiſſe heroa triumphis,
Dicet, SIC DETUR VINCERE, SIC MORIAR.

T O

J A M E S B O O T H, Esq;

O F L I N C O L N ' S I N N,

T H E F O L L O W I N G C O M E D Y,

T R A N S L A T E D F R O M T E R E N C E,

I S I N S C R I B E D

B Y H I S M O S T O B L I G E D,

M O S T F A I T H F U L,

A N D O B E D I E N T H U M B L E S E R V A N T,

G E O R G E C O L M A N.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE.

DEMEA.

MICIO.

ÆSCHINUS.

CTESIPHO.

HEGIO.

SANNIO.

SYRUS.

GETA.

DROMO.

PARMENIO, other Servants, &c.

SOSTRATA.

CANTHARA.

MUSICK-GIRL, and other Mutes.

SCENE, ATHENS.

P R O L O G U E.

THE Bard perceiving his piece cavill'd at
 By partial criticks, and his adverfaries
 Mifrepresenting what we're now to play,
 Pleads his own caufe; and you fhall be the judges,
 Whether he merits praife or condemnation.

The *Synapothefcontes is a Piece
 By Diphilus, † a Comedy which Plautus,
 Having tranflated, call'd COMMORIENTES.
 In the beginning of the Græcian play
 There is a youth, who rends a girl perforce
 From a procurer: and this incident,
 Untouch'd by Plautus, render'd word for word,
 Has our Bard interwoven with his Brothers;
 The new piece which we reprefent to-day.
 Say then if this be theft, ‡ or honeft ufe

Of

* Synapothefcontes.] A Greek word [Συναποθυσκοντες] fignifying dying together. Varro fomewhere declares that Plautus was not the author of the comedy, called Commorientes, a Latin word of the like import: but he certainly fpeaks of fome other play which bore the fame title, or the opinions of men muft have differed in his days concerning this matter; fome giving it to Plautus, others to Aquilius. Terence however, in my opinion, is an authority moft to be depended upon. The play of Plautus is loft. DACIER.

† Diphilus.] Diphilus, as well as Philemon, was a comick poet, cotemporary of Menander.

‡ If this be theft, &c.] Nothing can fet the Greek poets in a more exalted light, than to fee them, even from the earlieft days of the Romans,

P R O L O G U E.

Of what remain'd unoccupied.—For that
Which malice tells, that * certain noble persons
Assist the Bard, and write in concert with him;
That which they deem a heavy slander, He Esteems his greatest praise: that he can please
Those who please you, who all the people please;
Those who † in war, in peace, in counsel, ever
Have render'd you the dearest services,
And ever born their faculties so meekly.

Expect not now the story of the Play:
Part the old men, who first appear, will open;
Part will in act be shewn.—Be favourable;
And let your candour to the poet now
Increase his future earnestness to write!

Romans, not only so eagerly read, but so attentively and so carefully translated, that the Latin authors seldom or ever attempted any thing of their own: Donatus, in his preface to this comedy, says of TERENCE, minus existimans laudis proprias scribere, quam Græcas transferre,—"thinking it less praise to invent new plays, than to translate Greek ones." S.

* Certain noble persons.] Scipio, Lælius, & Furius Publius. DONATUS.
See the notes to the author's life.

† In war, peace, &c.] In war signifies Scipio; in peace, Furius Publius; in counsel, Lælius. DONATUS.

T H E

T H E
B R O T H E R S.

A C T I. S C E N E I.

Enter M I C I O.

HO, Storax! *—Æschinus did not return
Last night from supper; no, nor any one
Of all the slaves, who went to see for him. †
—'Tis commonly,—and oh how truly!—said,
If you are absent, or delay, 'twere best
That should befall you, which your wife denounces,
Or which in anger she calls down upon you,
Than that which kindest parents fear.—Your wife,
If you delay, or thinks that you're in love,
Or lov'd, or drink, or entertain yourself,
Taking your pleasure, while she pines at home.
—And what a world of fears possess me now!

* Ho, Storax!] Storax! non rediit hac nocte a cenâ Æschinus. Some consider Micio as asking a question in these words, but they are mistaken. He calls Storax; and finding he does not answer, concludes that neither Æschinus, nor any of his servants are come home. DONATUS.

† Who went to see for him.] Qui aduersum ierant. The servants, who went to meet their masters, and defend them home, were called Aduersitores. DONATUS.

How anxious that my son is not return'd ;
Left he take cold, or fall, or break a limb !
—Gods, that a man should suffer any one
To wind himself so close about his heart,
As to grow dearer to him than himself !
And yet he is not my son, but my brother's,
Whose bent of mind is wholly different.
I, from youth upward even to this day,
Have led a quiet, and serene, town-life ;
And, as some reckon fortunate, ne'er married.
He, in all points the opposite of this,
Has past his days entirely in the country
With thrift, and labour ; married ; had two sons.
The elder boy is by adoption mine ;
I've brought him up ; kept ; lov'd him as my own ;
Made him my joy, and all my soul holds dear,
Striving to make myself as dear to him.
I give, o'erlook, nor think it requisite
That all his deeds should be controul'd by me,
Giving him scope to act as of himself ;
So that the pranks of youth, which other children
Hide from their fathers, I have us'd my son
Not to conceal from me. For whoso'er
Hath won upon himself to play the false one,

And

And practise impositions on a father,
 Will do the same with less remorse to others;
 And 'tis, in my opinion, better far *
 To bind your children to you by the ties
 Of gentleness and modesty, than fear.
 And yet my brother don't accord in this,
 Nor do these notions, nor this conduct please him.
 Oft he comes open-mouth'd---Why how now, Micio?
 Why do you ruin this young lad of our's?
 Why does he wench? why drink? and why do you
 Allow him money to afford all this?
 You let him dress too fine. 'Tis idle in you.
 ---'Tis hard in him, unjust, and out of reason.
 And he, I think, deceives himself indeed,
 Who fancies that authority more firm
 Founded on force, than what is built on friendship;
 For thus I reason, thus persuade myself:
 He who performs his duty, driven to't
 By fear of punishment, while he believes

* And 'tis in my opinion, &c.] These sentiments are adopted by Ben Jonson in his Every Man in his Humour, where they are put into the mouth of old Knowell.

There is a way of winning more by love,
 And urging of the modesty, than fear:

Force works on servile natures, not the free.
 He that's compell'd to goodness, may be good;
 But 'tis but for that fit: where others, drawn
 By softness and example, get a habit.
 Then if they stray, but warn them; and the same
 They shou'd for virtue have done, they'll do for shame.

His actions are observ'd, so long he's wary;
 But if he hopes for secrecy, returns
 To his own ways again: But he whom kindness,
 Him also inclination makes your own:
 He burns to make a due return, and acts,
 Present or absent, evermore the same.
 'Tis this then is the duty of a father.
 To make a son embrace a life of virtue,
 Rather from choice, than terror or constraint.
 Here lies the mighty difference between
 A father and a master. He who knows not
 How to do this, let him confess he knows not
 How to rule children.---But is this the man, Whom I was speaking of? Yes, yes, 'tis he.
 He seems uneasy too, I know not why,
 And I suppose, as usual, comes to wrangle.*

S C E N E II.

Enter D E M E A.

Micio. Demea, I'm glad to see you well.

Demea. Oho! †

* Comes to wrangle.] There are several fine passages in this speech, and good observations on human life; yet it is too long a soliloquy. COOKE.

† Oho! well met.] The Poet has in this place improved on Menander, in representing Demea as more ready to wrangle with his brother, than to return his compliments.

DONATUS.

Well

Well met: the very man I came to seek.

Micio. But you appear uneasy: What's the matter?

Demea. Is it a question, when there's Æschinus
To trouble us, what makes me so uneasy?

Micio. I said it wou'd be so.---What has he done?

Demea. What has he done? a wretch, whom neither ties
Of shame, nor fear, nor any law can bind!
For not to speak of all his former pranks,
What has he been about but even now?

Micio. What has he done?

Demea. Burst open doors, and forc'd *
His way into another's house, and beat
The master and his family half-dead;
And carried off a wench whom he was fond of.
All the whole town cries shame upon him, Micio.
I have been told of it a hundred times
Since my arrival. 'Tis the common talk.---
† And if we needs must draw comparisons,
Does not he see his brother, thrifty, sober,
Attentive to his business in the country?

* Burst open doors, &c.] The character and passion of Demea is finely marked in the account which he gives of the riot; in which he dwells on every minute particular, endeavouring to multiply and exaggerate the offences of Æschinus, and concealing every palliating circumstance. DONATUS.

† And if we needs must draw comparisons.] There is much humour in this passage, when it appears that the son so much commended is the most in fault. DONATUS.

Not given to these practices? and when I say all this to Him, to You I say it.
You are his ruin, Micio.

Micio. How unjust
Is he, who wants experience! who believes
Nothing is right, but what he does himself!

Demea. Why d'ye say that?

Micio. Because you, Demea,
Judge wrongly of these matters. 'Tis no crime
For a young man to wench, or drink.---'Tis not,
Believe me!--nor to force doors open.---This
If neither you nor I have done, it was
That poverty allow'd us not. And now
You claim a merit to yourself, from that
Which want constrain'd you to. It is not fair.
For had there been but wherewithall to do't,
We likewise should have done thus. Wherefore You,
Were you a man, would let your younger son,
Now, while it suits his age, pursue his pleasures;
Rather than, when it less becomes his years,
When, after wishing long, he shall at last
Be rid of you, he should run riot then.

Demea. Oh Jupiter! the man will drive me mad.
Is it no crime, d'ye say, for a young man

To take these courses?

Micio. Nay, nay; do but hear me,
Nor stun me with the self same thing for ever!
Your elder son you gave me for adoption:
He's mine then, Demea; and if he offends,
'Tis an offence to me, and I must bear
The burden. * Does he treat? or drink? or drefs?
'Tis at my cost.—Or wench? I will supply him,
While 'tis convenient to me; when 'tis not,
† His mistresses perhaps will shut him out.

* Does he treat? or drink? &c.] The mild character of Micio is contrasted by Tully to that of a furious, severe father, as drawn by the famous comick poet Cæcilius. Both writers are quoted in the oration for Cælius, in the composition of which it is plain that the orator kept his eye pretty constantly on our poet.—The passages from Cæcilius contain all that vehemence and severity, which, as Horace tells us, was accounted the common character of the stile of that author.

Nunc demum mihi animus ardet, nunc meum cor cumulatur ira.

——O infelix, O scelus!——

Egone quid dicam? egone quid velim? quæ tu omnia tuis fædis factis facis, ut nequidquam velim.

Cur te in istam vicinatem meretriciam contu-listi? cur illecebris cognitis non refugisti? cur alienam ullam mulierem nosti? dide ac dissee, per me licebit. Si egebis, tibi dolebit: mihi sat est, qui ætatis quod reliquum est, oblectem meæ.

Now my soul burns, now my heart swells with an-——Oh wretch, oh monster!—— [ger.

What can I say? what can I wish? when you
By your vile deeds make all my wishes vain?
Why did you go into that neighbourhood?
Why, knowing her allurements, not avoid them?
And why maintain an intercourse so vile?
—Spend, squander, dissipate, I give you leave.
If want o'ertakes you, you alone will feel it:
For my remains of life I've yet enough.

† His mistresses perhaps will shut him out.]
Fortasse excludetur foras. I once understood this passage thus: perhaps I may turn him out of doors: but on further consideration I think the sense which I have followed more agreeable to the character of Micio. The fondness he expresses in this sentiment is very remarkable: he does not absolutely say, Æschinus's mistresses will turn him out of doors, excludetur foras, but fortasse excludetur foras, PERHAPS they MAY turn him out of doors. He is so extremely partial to his adopted son, that he thinks his mistresses would certainly care for him, even though he made them no presents. This expression fortasse has an admirable effect, as was observed by Donatus. DACIER.

---Has he broke open doors? we'll make them good.
Or torn a coat? it shall be mended. I,
Thank heaven, have enough to do all this,
And 'tis as yet not irksome.—In a word,
Or cease, or chuse some arbiter between us:
I'll prove that you are more in fault than I.

Demea. Ah, learn to be a father; learn from those,
Who know what 'tis to be indeed a parent!

Micio. By nature you're his father, I by counsel.

Demea. You! do you counsel any thing?

Micio. Nay, nay;

If you persist, I'm gone.

Demea. Is't thus you treat me?

Micio. Must I still hear the same thing o'er and o'er?

Demea. It touches me.

Micio. And me it touches too.

But, Demea, let us each look to our own;
Let me take care of one, and mind you t'other.
For to concern yourself with both, appears
As if you'd redemand the boy you gave.

Demea. Ah, Micio!

Micio. So it seems to me.

Demea. Well, well;

Let him, if 'tis your pleasure, waste, destroy,

And

And squander; it is no concern of mine.

If henceforth I e'er say one word —

Micio. Again?

Angry again, good Demea?

Demea. You may trust me.

Do I demand him back again I gave you?

—It hurts me. I am not a stranger to him.

—But if I once oppose---Well, well, I've done.

You wish I should take care of One. I do

Take special care of him; and he, thank heav'n,

Is as I wish he should be: which your ward,

I warrant, shall find out one time or other.

I will not say ought worse of him at present. [Exit.]

S C E N E III.

MICIO alone. *

Though what he says be not entirely true,

There's something in it, and it touches me.

But I dissembled my concern with him,

Because the nature of the man is such,

* Micio alone.] Terence seems inclined to favour the part of mild fathers. He represents Micio as affected at his son's irregularities; lest, if he should appear wholly unmoved, he might seem to corrupt his son, rather than to treat him with a proper indulgence. Wherefore, through all his moderation, he still betrays a fatherly emotion.

DONATUS.

To pacify, I must oppose and thwart him;
 And even thus I scarce can teach him patience.
 But were I to inflame, or aid his anger,
 I were as great a madman as himself.
 Yet Æschinus, 'tis true, has been to blame.
 What wench is there he has not lov'd? to whom
 He has not made some present?---And but lately
 (Tir'd, I suppose, and sick of wantonness)
 * He told me he propos'd to take a wife.
 I hop'd the hey-day of the blood was over,
 And was rejoyc'd: but his intemperance
 Breaks out afresh.---Well, be it what it may,
 I'll find him out; and know it instantly,
 If he is to be met with at the Forum. [Exit.

† He told me he propos'd to take a wife.
 The art of Terence in preparing his incidents is wonderful. He contrives that even ignorant persons shall open the plot: as in the present instance, which gives us to understand that Æschinus had mentioned to Micio his intentions of taking a wife, though he had not entered into particulars. This naturally leads us to the ensuing part of the fable, without forestalling any of the circumstances. DONATUS.

ACT II. SCENE I.

Enter ÆSCHINUS, SANNIO, PARMENO, the Mufick Girl, and a Croud of People.

San. HELP, help, dear countrymen, for heaven's sake!
Assist a miserable harmless man!

Help the distressed!

Æsch. to the Girl.] Fear nothing: stand just there!
Why d'ye look back? you're in no danger. Never,
While I am by, shall he lay hands upon you.

San. Ay, but I will, in spite of all the world.

Æsch. Rogue as he is, he'll scarce do any thing
To make me cudgel him again to-day.

San. One word, Sir Æschinus! that you may not Pretend to ignorance of my profession;
I'm a Procurer.*

Æsch. True.

San. And in my way

* I'm a Procurer.] He says this to Æschinus to intimidate him, alluding to the privileges allowed to the Procurers at Athens, on account of the profit accruing to the republic from their traffick in slaves. It was forbid to abuse them, on pain of disinherittance. Hence in Lucian a young man, complaining of being disinherited by his father, says, τις πορνόεσσις ὀρίσται; "what slave-merchant accuses me of having mal-treated him?"

DACIER.

Of as good faith as any man alive.

Hereafter, to absolve yourself, you'll cry,

That you repent of having wrong'd me thus.

I shan't care that for your excuse. [snapping his fingers.] Be sure,

I'll prosecute my right; nor shall fine words

Atone for evil deeds. I know your way.

——“ I'm sorry that I did it: and I'll swear

“ You are unworthy of this injury”——

Though all the while I'm us'd most scurvily.

Æsch. to Par.] Do you go forwards, Parmeno, and throw
The door wide open.

San. That sha'n't signify.

Æsch. to Parmeno.] Now in with her!

San. stepping between.] I'll not allow it.

Æsch. to Parmeno.] Here!

Come hither, Parmeno!---you're too far off.---

Stand close to that Pimp's side---There---there---just there!

And now be sure you always keep your eyes

Stedfastly fix'd on mine; and when I wink,

To drive your fist directly in his face.

San. Ay, if he dare.

Æsch. to Par.] Now mind!---[to Sannio.] Let go the girl!

[Sannio still struggling with the Girl, Æschinus winks, and Parmeno strikes Sannio.]

San.

San. Oh monstrous!

Æsch. He shall double it, unless

You mend your manners. [Parmeno strikes Sannio again.]

San. Help, help: murder, murder!

Æsch. to Parmeno.] I did not wink: but you had better err
That way than t'other.---Now go in with her.

[Parmeno leads the Girl into Micio's House.]

San. How's this?---Do you reign King here, Æschinus?

Æsch. Did I reign King, you should be recompens'd.
According to your virtues, I assure you.

San. What business have you with me?

Æsch. None.

San. D'ye know *

Who I am, Æschinus?

Æsch. Nor want to know.

San. Have I touch'd ought of your's, Sir?

Æsch. If you had,
You should have suffer'd for't.

San. What greater right
Have you to take away my slave, for whom
I paid my money? answer me!

Æsch. 'Twere best,

* D'ye know who I am?] Nostin' qui sim? A law term, signifying, "Do I owe you anything?" DONATUS.

You'd leave off bellowing before our door:
 If you continue to be troublesome,
 I'll have you dragg'd into the house, and there
 Lash'd without mercy.

San. How, a freeman lash'd!

Æsch. Ev'n so.

San. O monstrous tyranny! Is this,
 Is this the liberty they boast of here,
 Common to all?

Æsch. If you have brawl'd enough,
 Please to indulge me with one word, you Pimp.

San. Who has brawl'd most, yourself, or I?

Æsch. Well, well!
 No more of that, but to the point!

San. What point?
 What wou'd you have?

Æsch. Will you allow me then
 To speak of what concerns you?

San. Willingly:
 Speak but in justice.

Æsch. Very fine! a Pimp,
 And talks of justice!

San. Well, I am a Pimp; *

The

* A Pimp; the common bane, &c.] This seems to be a translation from Diphilus, from whom this part of the fable was taken.

The common bane of youth, a perjurer,
A publick nuisance, I confess it: yet
I never did You wrong.

Æsch. No, that's to come.

San. Prithee return to whence you first set out, Sir!

Æsch. You, plague upon you for it! bought the girl.
For twenty Minæ; which sum we will give you.

San. What if I do not chuse to sell the girl?
Will you oblige me?

Æsch. No.

San. I fear'd you would!

Æsch. She's a free-woman, and should not be sold,
And, as such,* by due course of law I claim her.
Now then consider which you like the best,
To take the money, or maintain your action.
Think on this, Pimp, till I come back again. [Exit.

Οὐκ εἰν ἄλλε τέχνην ἐξωλέσμερον.
Τὴ πορνείῳσιν.

No calling is more baneful and pernicious,
Than that of a Procurer.

WESTERHOVIUS.

The Procurer was a common character in the comedy of the antients; but if we may pronounce from their remains, we may venture to say that the character was never so finely painted in any part of their works, as in the following lines of Shakespeare.

Fie, firrah, a bawd, a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou caufest to be done,

That is thy means to live. Dost thou but think,
What 'tis to cram a maw, or cloath a back
From such a filthy vice? Say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending! Go mend, mend.

Measure for Measure.

† By due course of law I claim her.] Ego liberali illam affero causâ manu. Law terms. The defenders of the liberty of another were called Affertores, and the suit commenced on that account called Liberalis causa, an action of freedom. DONATUS.

SCENE II.

SANNIO alone.

Oh Jupiter! I do not wonder now
 That men run mad with injuries. He drags me
 Out of my own house; cudgels me most soundly;
 And carries off my slave against my will:
 And after this ill treatment, he demands
 The Mufick-Girl to be made over to him,
 At the same price I bought her.---He has pour'd
 His blows upon me, thick as hail; for which,
 Since he deserves so nobly at my hands,
 He should no doubt be gratified.---Nay, nay;
 Let me but touch the cash, I'm still content.
 But this I guess will be the case: as soon
 As I shall have agreed to take his price,
 He'll produce witnesses immediately,
 To prove that I have sold her.---And the money
 Will be mere moon-shine.---"By and by."---"To morrow."
 ---Yet I could bear that too, tho' much wrong,
 Might I but get the money after all:
 For thus it is, friend Sannio; when a man

Has

Has taken up this trade, he must receive,
 And pocket the affronts of young gallants.
 —But nobody will pay me, and I draw
 Conclusions to no purpose.

S C E N E III.

Enter SYRUS.

Syrus. to Æsch. within.] Say no more !
 Let me alone to talk with him ! I warrant
 I'll make him take the money ; ay, and own
 That he's well treated too. [coming forward.

Why how now, Sannio ?

What's the dispute I overheard just now
 'Twixt you and my young master ?

San. Never was
 Any dispute conducted more unfairly,
 Than that between us two to-day ! Poor I
 With being drubb'd, and he with drubbing me,
 'Till we were both quite weary.

Syrus. All your fault.

San. What could I do ?

Syrus. Give a young man his way.

Y y

San.

San. What could I give him more, who gave my face?

Syrus. Nay, but d'ye know my meaning, Sannio?

To seem upon occasion to flight money,
Proves in the end, sometimes, the greatest gain.

Why prithee, blockhead, could you be afraid,
Had you abated somewhat of your right,
And humour'd the young gentleman, he would not
Have paid you back again with interest?

San. I never purchase hope with ready money.

Syrus. Away! you'll never thrive. You do not know
How to ensnare men, Sannio.

San. Well, perhaps,
Your way were best: yet I was ne'er so crafty
But I had rather, when 'twas in my power,
Receive prompt payment.

Syrus. Pshaw! I know your spirit:
As if you valued Twenty Minæ now,
So you might do a kindness to my master!
—Besides they say you're setting out for Cyprus. [carelessly.

San. Ha! [alarm'd.

Syrus.---And have bought up a large stock of goods
To carry over thither.---Hir'd a vessel.
That 'tis, I know, which keeps you in suspense:
When you return, I hope, you'll fettle this.

San.

San. I shall not budge a foot.---Undone, by heav'n!
Urg'd by these hopes they've undertaken this. [aside.

Syrus. He fears. I've thrown a small rub in his way. [aside.

San. to himself.] Confusion! they have nick'd me to a hair! *
I've bought up sev'ral slaves, and other wares,
For exportation; and to miss my time
† At Cyprus-fair would be a heavy loss.
Then if I leave this business broken thus,
All's over with me; and at my return
'Twill come to nothing, grown quite cold and stale.

“ ——— What! come at last?---Why did you stay so long?

“ Where have you been?”---that it were better lose it,
Than wait for it so long, or sue for't then. [your due?

Syrus, coming up to him.] ‡ Well, have you calculated what's

San. Monstrous oppression! Is this honourable,
Or just in Æschinus, to take away
My property by force?

Syrus. So, so! he comes. [aside.

---I have but one word more to say to you.

* Nick'd me to a hair.] In ipso articulo oppreffit. Literally, “ hit me in the very “ joint.”

† At Cyprus-fair.] The merchants used to buy up slaves in all parts of Greece, to sell them at Cyprus, where a celebrated fair was kept for that purpose. DACIER.

‡ Well, have you calculated what's your due?] Famne enumerâsti id, quod ad te redditurum putes? I have translated these words according to the interpretation of Donatus. Madam Dacier puts another sense upon them, and thinks they rather mean Sannio's calculation of his profits at Cyprus. The subsequent conversation between Syrus and Sannio inclined me rather to adopt the former opinion.

See, how you like it.---Rather, Sannio,
 Than run the risk to get or lose the whole,
 E'en halve the matter: and he shall contrive
 To scrape together by some means * Ten Minæ.

San. Alas, alas! am I in danger then
 Of losing ev'n my very principal?
 Shame on him! he has loosen'd all my teeth:
 My head is swell'd all over like a mushroom:
 And will he cheat me too?---I'm going no where.

Syrus. Just as you please.---Have you ought else to say,
 Before I go?

San. Yes, one word, prithee Syrus!
 However things have happen'd, rather than
 I should be driven to commence a suit,
 Let him return me my bare due at least;
 The sum she cost me, Syrus.---I'm convinc'd
 You've had no tokens of my friendship yet;
 But you shall find I will not be ungrateful.

Syrus. I'll do my best. But I see Ctesipho.
 He is rejoic'd about his mistress.

San. Say,
 Will you remember me?

Syrus. Hold, hold a little!

[Syrus and Sannio retire.

* Scrape together by some means Ten Minæ.
 Syrus knew very well that Æschinus was ready to pay the whole, but offers Sannio half, that he might be glad to take his bare principal, and think himself well off into the bargain. DONATUS.

S C E N E IV.

Enter CTESIPHON at another part of the Stage.

Ctes. Favours are welcome in the hour of need
From any hand; but doubly welcome, when Conferr'd by those, from whom we most expect them.
O brother, brother, how shall I applaud thee?
Ne'er can I rise to such a height of praise
But your deservings will out-top me still:
For in this point I am supremely blest,
That none can boast so excellent a brother,
So rich in all good qualities, as I.

Syrus, coming forward.] O Ctesiphon!

Ctes. turning round.] O Syrus! where's my brother?

Syrus. At home, where he expects you.

Ctes. Ha! [joyfully.]

Syrus. What now?

Ctes. What now!---By his assistance I live, Syrus.
Ah, he's a friend indeed! who disregarding
All his own interests for my advantage,
The scandal, infamy, intrigue, and blame,
All due to me, has drawn upon himself!

What

What could exceed it?---But who's there?---The door
Creaks on the hinges. [offering to go off.

Syrus. Hold! 'tis Æschinus.

S C E N E V.

Enter ÆSCHINUS.

Æsch. Where is that rascal? *

San. behind.] He enquires for me.

Has he brought out the cash with him?—Confusion!
I see none.

Æsch. to Ctesipho.] Ha! well met: I long'd to see you.
How is it, Ctesipho? All's safe. Away
With melancholy!

Ctes. Melancholy! I
Be melancholy, who have such a brother?
Oh my dear Æschinus! thou best of brothers,
—Ah, I'm asham'd to praise you to your face,
Lest it appear to come from flattery,
Rather than gratitude.

* Æsch. Where is that rascal? San. He enquires for me.] The character of Sannio is well sustained. He immediately takes to himself the infamous name of rascal, and acknowledges it with joy, thinking he is enquired after, in order to be paid; and droops afterwards, not on account of hard words and ill usage, but only for fear he should not get his money. DONATUS.

Æsch. Away, you fool!

As if we did not know each other, Ctesipho.
It only grieves me, we so lately knew this,
When things were almost come to such a pass,
That all the world, had they desir'd to do it,
Could not assist you.

Ctes. 'Twas my modesty.

Æsch. Pshaw! it was folly, and not modesty.
For such a trifle, almost * fly your country?
Heaven forbid it!--fie, fie, Ctesipho!

Ctes. I've been to blame.

Æsch. Well, what says Sannio?

Syrus. He's pacified at last.

Æsch. I'll to the Forum,
And pay him off.—You, Ctesipho, go in
To the poor girl.

San. Now urge the matter, Syrus! [apart to Syrus.]

Syrus. Let's go; for Sannio wants to be at Cyprus. †

San. Not in such haste: tho' truly I've no cause
To loiter here.

* Almost fly your country.] In Menander the young man was on the point of killing himself. Terence has softened this circumstance. DONATUS.

We know that the circumstance of carrying off the Musick-Girl was borrowed from Diphilus: yet it is plain that there was also an intrigue of Ctesipho's in the play of Me-nander: which gives another proof of the manner in which Terence used the Greek Comedies.

† Sannio wants to be at Cyprus.] A piece of arch malice in Syrus, in order to tease Sannio. DONATUS.

Syrus. You shall be paid : ne'er fear !

San. But all ?

Syrus. Yes, all : so hold your tongue, and follow !

San. I will. [Exit after Æschinus---Syrus going.

Ctes. Hift ! hark ye, Syrus !

Syrus, turning back.] Well, what now ?

Ctes. For heaven's sake discharge that scurvy fellow
Immediately ; for fear, if further urg'd,
This tale should reach my father's ears : and then
I am undone for ever.

Syrus. It sha'n't be.

Be of good courage ! meanwhile, get you in,
And entertain yourself with Her ; and order
The couches to be spread, and all prepar'd.
For, these preliminaries once dispatch'd,
I shall march homewards with provisions.

Ctes. Do !

And since this business has turn'd out so well,
Let's spend the day in mirth and jollity !

[Exeunt severally.

•
A C T

ACT III. SCENE I.

S O S T R A T A, C A N T H A R A.

Sof. PRITHEE, good nurse, how will it go with her?
Can. How go with her? Why well, I warrant you.

Sof. Her pains begin to come upon her, nurse.

Can. You're as much frighten'd at your time of day,
 As if you ne'er was present at a labour,
 Or never had been brought to bed yourself.

Sof. Alas, I've no foul here: we're all alone.
 Geta is absent; nor is there a creature
 To fetch a midwife, or call Æschinus.

Can. He'll be here presently, I promise you:
 For he, good man, ne'er lets a single day
 Go by, but he is sure to visit us.

Sof. He is my only comfort in my sorrows.

Can. Troth, as the case stands, madam, circumstances
 Could not have happen'd better than they have:
 And since your daughter suffer'd violence,
 'Twas well she met with such a man as this;
 A man of honour, rank, and family.

Sof. He is, indeed, a worthy gentleman:
 The Gods preserve him to us!

S C E N E II.

Enter GETA hastily at another part of the Stage.

Geta. We are now
So absolutely lost, that all the world
Joining in consultation to apply
Relief to the misfortune, that has fallen
On me, my mistress, and her daughter, all
Wou'd not avail.---Ah me! so many troubles
Environ us at once, we sink beneath them.
Rape, poverty, oppression, solitude,
And infamy! oh, what an age is this!
O wicked, oh vile race!---oh impious man!

Sof. to Canthara.] Ah, why should Geta seem thus terrified,
And agitated?

Geta, to himself.] Wretch! whom neither honour,
Nor oaths, nor pity could controul or move!
Nor her approaching labour; her, on whom
He shamefully committed violation!

Sof. I don't well understand him.

Can. Prithee then

Let us draw nearer, Sofrata!

Geta.

Geta, to himself.] Alas,

I'm scarcely in my perfect mind, I burn
 With such fierce anger.---Oh, that I had all
 That villain-family before me now,
 That I might vent my indignation on them,
 While yet it boils within me.---There is nothing
 I'd not endure to be reveng'd on them.
 First I'd tread out the stinking snuff his father,
 Who gave the monster being.---And then, Syrus,
 Who urg'd him to it,---how I'd tear him!---First,
 I'd seize him round the waist, and lift him high,
 Then dash his head against the ground, and strew
 The pavement with his brains.---For Æschinus,
 I'd tear his eyes out, and then tumble him,
 Headforemost down some precipice.---The rest
 I'd rush on, drag, crush, trample underfoot.
 But why do I delay to tell my mistress
 This heavy news as soon as possible? [going.

Sof. Let's call him back.---Ho, Geta!

Geta. Whosoe'er

You are, excuse me.*

* Whosoe'er you are, excuse me.] Geta's reply is founded on a frolicsome, but ill-natured custom, which prevailed in Greece; to stop the slaves in the streets, and design-edly keep them in chat, so that they might be lashed when they came home, for staying out so long. DACIER.

Sof. I am Softrata. you, Madam;

Geta. Where, where is Softrata? [turns about.] I fought Impatiently I fought you: and am glad
To have encounter'd you thus readily.

Sof. What is the matter? why d'ye tremble thus?

Geta. Alas!

Sof. Take breath!---But why thus mov'd, good Geta?

Geta. We're quite——

Sof. Quite what?

Geta. Undone: We're ruin'd, Madam.

Sof. Explain, for heaven's fake!

Geta. Ev'n now ——

Sof. What now?

Geta. Æschinus ——

Sof. What of Æschinus?

Geta. Has quite

Estrang'd himself from all our family.

Sof. How's that? confusion! why?

Geta. He loves another.

Sof. Wretch that I am!

Geta. Nor that clandestinely;

But snatch'd her in the face of all the world

From a procurer.

Sof. Are you fure of this?

Geta.

Geta. Sure? With these very eyes I saw 'it, Madam.

Sof. Alas, alas! What then can we believe?

To whom give credit?—What? our Æschinus!*

Our very life, our sole support, and hope!

Who swore he could not live one day without her,

And promis'd he would place the new-born babe

Upon his father's lap,† and in that way

Wring from him his consent to marry her!

Geta. Nay, weep not, mistress; but consider rather
What course were best to follow: to conceal

This wrong, or to disclose it to some friend?

Can. Disclose it! Are you mad? Is this a thing

* What? our Æschinus? &c.] Nostrumne Æschinum? &c. There is something extremely touching in this manner of speaking. Shakspeare, whose works contain examples of every species of beauty in poetry, affords us a very elegant instance of this irregular manner, which, addressing itself to the passions, affects us more sensibly than set forms of speech. The turn of phrase, in which Desdemona pleads for Cassio, is a good deal similar to the way in which Sofrata here speaks of Æschinus.

—————What? Michael Cassio?—
That came wooing with you, and many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part, to have so much to do
To bring him in! OTHELLO.

† Upon his father's lap.] The Grecians, as soon as they had a child born, immediately put it on the grandfather's knee if he were living. Phoenix in the ninth Iliad says that his father loaded him with curses, and invoked the Furies, conjuring them that no child of his son might be placed on his knees.

—————Πατηρ δ' εμος, αυτις οισθεις,
Πολλα κατηρατο, τυλερας δ' επενεκλειε' Ερινυς,
Μη ποτε γνασιν οισιν εφesseσθαι φιλον υιον
Εξ εμεθεν γεσσωτα. Iliad, l. ix. v. 453:

Mr. Pope's translation not having preserved that idea, the liberty has been taken, of adding two lines.

*My fire with curses loads my hated head,
And cries, "Ye Furies! barren be his bed."
Never, dread sisters, never may I see
A child, his offspring, plac'd upon my knee!*
See Pope's Iliad, b. 9. v. 582.

This custom did not prevail among the Romans: our author, notwithstanding, as he translated his play from the Greek, judiciously preserves that usage. DACIER.

To be disclos'd, d'ye think?

Geta. I'd not advise it.

For first, that he has quite abandon'd us,
The thing itself declares. If we then make
The story known, no doubt but he'll deny it.
Your reputation, and your daughter's life
Will be endanger'd: or if he confess,
Since he affects another, 'twere not good
That he should wed your daughter.—For which reasons,
Silence is requisite.

Sof. Ah, no: not I.

Geta. What mean you?

Sof. To disclose the whole.

Geta. How, Madam!

Think what you are about.

Sof. Whatever happens,
The thing can't be in a worse state than now.
In the first place my daughter has no portion,
And that which should have been her second dowry,
Is also lost; and she can ne'er be giv'n
In marriage as a virgin. For the rest,
If he denies his former commerce with her,
I have the ring he lost to vouch the fact.
In short, since I am conscious to myself,

That I am not to blame in this proceeding,
And that no sordid love of gain, nor aught,
Unworthy of my daughter or myself,
Has mixt in this affair, I'll try it, Geta.

Geta. Well, I agree, 'twere better to disclose it. *

Sof.

* Well, I agree 'twere better to disclose it.] Accedo, ut melius dicas. Nothing can be plainer than these words. Yet they have been the occasion of great perplexity to commentators and translators. Madam Dacier gives them a sense directly opposite to that which I have followed. Ab, qu'allez vous faire? je vous en prie changez de sentiment. Echard, who keeps his eye more constantly on the French translation, than on the original, says, much to the same purpose, D'ye think so? Pray think on't again. Cooke has it, How? let me advise you to think better of it. Westerhovius supposes Sostrata to have seemed angry with Geta, and therefore explains ut melius dicas to signify ut bona verba loquaris—that you may speak mildly. Patrick justly thinking that this is too strained, and no satisfying answer to Sostrata; and, from what follows, seeing the necessity of explaining Geta's answer, so as to make it imply an assent, supposes an ellipse, and supplies it thus. Accedo tibi, ut qui melius dicas.—I submit to you, as you seem to speak with more justice. All these interpretations are founded on the supposition that melius is the accusative governed by dicas. I have no doubt but that melius is here used adverbially, which will lead us to this easy construction, Accedo, melius ut dicas;—I agree, that you may better tell it; implying Geta's coming into her opinion on the point in dispute. The remark of Donatus on this passage, ut consentiam, velut qui melius possim dicere, is certainly corrupted; but if we read, as we are told it stands in some copies, veluti melius potens sis dicere, it will give the same sense that I have followed. Eugraphius in his long note on the words Hera, lacrimas mitte! weep not, mistress! plainly understands them in this manner. But, as a greater authority than all commentators, I shall appeal to Terence himself; and submit the whole context, as it stands in the original, to the judgment of the learned reader.—These verbal criticisms are dry and unpleasant both to the writer and reader. I very frequently avoid them: but in a controverted passage, where the sense is materially concerned, it would seem indolence or arrogance not to submit to them.

G. Hera, lacrimas mitte, ac potius, quod ad hanc rem opu', porro prospice.

Patiamurne, an narremus cuipiam? C. au, au mi homo, sanun' es?

An hoc proferendum tibi usquam esse videtur?

G. mihi quidem non placet. [indicat.

Jam primum, illum alieno animo à nobis esse, res ipsa

Nunc si hoc palam proferimus, ille inficias ibit, sat scio; [maxime

Tua fama, & gnatae vita in dubium veniet. tum si Fateatur, cum amet aliam, non est utile hanc illi dari.

Quapropter, quoquo pacto tacito est opus. S. ah, minime gentium:

Non faciam. G. quid ages? S. proferam. G. hem, mea Sostrata, vide quam rem agas.

S. Pejore res loco non potis est esse, quam in hoc, quo nunc sita est. [dos erat,

Primum indotata est: tum præterea, quæ secunda ei Perit: pro virgine dari nuptum non potest: hoc reliquum est, [ferat.

Si inficias ibit, testis mecum est annulus, quem amicosfiremo,

Sof. You then away, as fast as possible,
And run to Hegio our good friend and kinsman,
To let him know the whole affair: for He
Was the chief friend of my dear Simulus,
And ever shew'd a great regard for Us.

Geta. And well he does, for no one else cares for us,

Sof. And you, good Canthara, away with haste,
And call a midwife; that we may be sure
Of her assistance in the time of need. [Exeunt severally.]

S C E N E III.

Enter D E M E A.

Dem. Confusion! I have heard that Ctesipho
Was present with his brother at this riot.
This is the sum of all my miseries,
If He, even He, a sober, hopeful, lad,
May be seduc'd into debaucheries.
---But where shall I enquire for him? I warrant
They have decoy'd him into some vile brothel.
That profligate persuaded him, I'm sure.

Postremo, quando ego conficia mihi sum, à me culpam
hanc procul esse, nec
Præitium, neque rem ullam intercesse illa aut me indignam; experiar, Geta.

G. Quid istuc? accedo, ut melius dicas. S. tu, quantum potest, abi, &c.

---But

---But here comes Syrus; He can tell me all.
And yet this slave is of the gang; and if
He once perceives that I'm enquiring for him,
He'll never tell me any thing, a rogue!
I'll not discover my design.

S C E N E IV.

Enter SYRUS at another part of the Stage.

Syrus, to himself.] We've just
Disclos'd the whole of this affair to Micio,
Exactly as it happen'd. I ne'er saw
The good old gentleman more pleas'd.

Dem. Oh heav'n,
The folly of the man! [listening.

Syrus, to himself.] He prais'd his son;
Me, who concerted the whole scheme, he thank'd.

Dem. I burst with rage. [listening.

Syrus, to himself.] He told the money down
Immediately, and threw us in beside,
To make an entertainment, a Half-Mina:
Which I've laid out according to my liking.

Dem. So if you'd have your business well ta'en care of,
Commit it to this fellow!

Syrus, overhearing.] Who's there? Demea!

I did not see you, Sir. How goes it?

Dem. How?

I can't sufficiently admire your conduct.

Syrus, negligently.] Silly enough, to say the truth, and idle
To servants within.]—Cleanse you the rest of those fish, Dromo:
 That large eel play a little in the water. [Let
 When I return it shall be bon'd; till then
 It must not be.

Dem. Are crimes like these——

Syrus, to Demea.] Indeed

I like them not, and oft cry shame upon them.

—To servants within.] See that those salt fish are well soak'd, Stephanio.

Dem. Gods, is this done on purpose? Does he think
 'Tis laudable to spoil his son? Alas!
 I think I see the day, when Æschinus
 Shall fly for want, and list himself a foldier.

Syrus. O Demea! That is to be wise: To see,
 Not that alone which lies before your feet,
 But ev'n to pry into futurity.

Dem. What? is the Mufick-Girl at your house?

Syrus. Ay,
 Madam's within.

Dem.

Dem. What! and is Æschinus
To keep her at home with him?

Syrus. I believe so;
Such is their madnefs.

Dem. Is it poffible?

Syrus. A fond, and foolifh father!

Dem. I'm afham'd
To own my brother. I'm griev'd for him.

Syrus. Ah!
There is a deal of diff'rence, Demea,
---Nor is't, becaufe you're prefent, that I fay this —
There is a mighty difference between you!
You are, from top to toe, all over wifdom:
He, a mere dotard.—Would you e'er permit
Your boy to do fuch things?

Dem. Permit him? I?
Or fhould I not much rather fmell him out
Six months before he did but dream of it?

Syrus. Pfhaw! do you boaft your vigilance to Me?

Dem. Heav'n keep him ever, as he is at prefent!

Syrus. As fathers form their children, fo they prove.

Dem. But now we're fpeaking of him, have you feen
The lad to-day? [with an affected carelefsnefs.]

Syrus. Your fon d'ye mean?—I'll drive him

Into the country. [aside.—He is hard at work
Upon your grounds by this time. [to Demea.

Dem. Are you fure on't?

Syrus. Sure? I fet out with him myself.

Dem. Good! good!

I was afraid he loiter'd here. [aside.

Syrus. And much
Enrag'd, I promise you.

Dem. On what account?

Syrus. A quarrel with his Brother at the Forum,
About the Mufick-Girl.

Dem. Indeed?

Syrus. Ay, faith:

He did not mince the matter: he spoke out.

For as the cash was telling down, in pops,

All unexpected, Master Ctesipho:

Cries out,—“Oh Æschinus, are these your courses?

“Do you commit these crimes; and do you bring

“Such a disgrace upon our family?”

Dem. Oh, oh, I weep for joy.

Syrus. —“You squander not

“The money only, but your life, your honour.”

Dem. Heav'n blefs him! He is like his ancestors. [weeping.

Syrus. Father's own son, I warrant him.

Dem.

Dem. Oh, Syrus!

He's full of all those precepts, He!

Syrus. No doubt on't:

He need not go from home for good instruction.

Dem. I spare no pains; neglect no means: I train him:
---In short I bid him look into the lives
Of all, as in a mirror, and thence draw
From others an example for himself.

---“ Do this.” ---

Syrus. Good!

Dem. “ Fly that.”

Syrus. Very good!

Dem. “ This deed:

“ Is commendable.”

Syrus. That's the thing!

Dem. “ That's reprehensible.”

Syrus. Most excellent!

Dem. “ And then moreover ---

Syrus. Faith, I have not time
To give you further audience just at present.
I've got an admirable dish of fish;
And I must take good care they are not spoilt.
For that were an offence as grievous, Demea,
In Us, as 'twere in You to leave undone

The things you juſt now mention'd: and I try,
According to my weak abilities,

To teach my fellow-slaves the ſelf-fame way.

---“ This is too falt.---This is burnt-up too much.

---“ That is not nice and cleanly.---That's well done.

“ Mind, and do ſo again.”---I ſpare no pains,

And give them the beſt precepts that I can.

In ſhort, I bid them look into the diſhes,

As in a mirror, Demea, and thence learn

The duty of a cook.---This ſchool of our's,

I own, is idle: but what can you do?

According to the man muſt be the leſſon.

---Would you aught elſe with us?

Dem. Your reformation.

Syrus. Do you go hence into the country?

Dem. Strait.

Syrus. For what ſhould you do here, where nobody,

However good your precepts, cares to mind them? [Exit.

S C E N E V.

D E M E A alone.

I then will hence, ſince he, on whoſe account

I hither came, is gone into the country.

He

He is my only care, He's my concern.
 My Brother, since he needs will have it so,
 May look to Æschinus himself.—But who Is coming yonder? Hegio, of our tribe? *
 If I see plainly, beyond doubt 'tis he.
 Ah, we've been old acquaintance quite from boys;
 And such men now-a-days are wondrous scarce.
 A citizen of ancient faith and virtue!
 The commonwealth will ne'er reap harm from Him.
 How I rejoice to see but the remains
 Of this old stock! Ah, life's a pleasure now.
 I'll wait, that I may ask about his health,
 And have a little conversation with him.

S C E N E VI.

Enter HEGIO, GETA conversing at a distance.

Hegio. Good heaven! a most unworthy action, Geta!
 Can it be true?

Geta. Ev'n so.

* Hegio, of our tribe.] We are told that the Athenians were divided into tribes, but writers are not agreed as to their number. Some say twelve, in imitation of the Jewish tribes: but what connection was there between the Athenians and Jews? It is probable that this number was derived from the twelve months of the year: for we find that there were also in every tribe thirty subdivisions, alluding to the number of days in a month. PATRICK.

Hegio. A deed so base
Sprung from that family?---Oh Æschinus,
I'm sure this was not acting like your father.

Demea, behind.] So! he has heard about this Mufick-Girl,
And 'is affected at it, tho' a stranger,
While his good father truly thinks it nothing.
Oh monstrous! wou'd that he were somewhere nigh,
And heard all this!

Hegio. Unless they do what's just,
They shall not carry off the matter thus.

Geta. Our only hope is in you, Hegio.
You're our sole friend, our guardian, and our father.
The good old Simulus, on his death-bed,
Bequeath'd us to your care. If you desert us,
We are undone indeed.

Hegio. Ah, name it not!
I will not, and, with honesty, I cannot.

Dem. I'll go up to him.---Save you, Hegio!

Hegio. The man I look'd for.---Save you, Demea!

Dem. Your pleasure!

Hegio. Æschinus, your elder son,
Adopted by your brother, has committed
A deed unworthy of an honest man,
And of a gentleman.

Dem.

Dem. How so?

Hegio. You knew

Our friend and good acquaintance, Simulus?

Dem. Ay, sure.

Hegio. He has debauch'd his daughter.

Dem. How!

Hegio. Hold, Demea; for the worst is still to come.

Dem. Is there aught worse?

Hegio. Much worse: for this perhaps
Might be excus'd. The night, love, wine, and youth Might prompt him. 'Tis the frailty of our nature.
——Soon as his sense returning made him conscious
Of his rash outrage, of his own accord
He came to the girl's mother, weeping, praying,
Intreating, vowing constancy, and swearing
That he would take her home.---He was forgiven;
The thing conceal'd; and his vows credited.
The girl from that encounter prov'd with child:
This is the tenth month. *---He, good gentleman,
Has got a Musick-Girl, heav'n blest the mark!
With whom he means to live, and quit the other.

Dem. And are you well assur'd of this?

* This is the tenth month.] Lunar months: the common method of computation before Julius Cæsar. WESTERHOVIUS.

Hegio. The mother,
The girl, the fact itself, are all before you,
Joining to vouch the truth on't. And besides,
This Geta here—as servants go, no bad one,
Nor given up to idleness—maintains them;
The sole support of all the family.
Here take him, bind him, force the truth from him.

Geta. Ay, torture me, if 'tis not so, good Demea!
Nay, Æschinus, I'm sure, will not deny it.
Bring me before him.

Dem. aside.] I'm ashamed: and what
To do, or what to say to him, I know not.

Pamphila, within.] Ah me! I'm torn in pieces!---Racking
Juno Lucina, help me! save, I pray thee! [pains! *

Hegio. Ha! Is she then in labour, Geta?

Geta. Yes, Sir.

Hegio. Hark! she now calls upon your justice, Demea!
Grant her then freely, what law else will claim.
And heaven send, that you may rather do.
What honour bids! But if you mean it not,
Be sure of this; that with my utmost force.

* Ah me! &c.] This is the second instance in our author of the outcries of a woman in labour: a circumstance not easily to be reconciled to modern notions of decency, though certainly considered as no in-decorum in those days. I shall not defend the practice; but cannot help observing, that allowing such an incident, Terence in the present instance makes a most pathetic and oratorical use of it.

I'll vindicate the girl, and her dead father.
 He was my kinsman: * we were bred together
 From children; and our fortunes twin'd together
 In war, and peace, and bitter poverty.
 Wherefore I'll try, endeavour, strive, nay lose
 My life itself, before I will forsake them.
 —What is your answer?

Dem. I'll find out my brother:

What he advises, I will follow, Hegio. †

Hegio. But still remember, Demea, that the more
 You live at ease; the more your pow'r, your wealth,
 Your riches, and nobility; the more
 It is your duty to act honourably,
 If you regard the name of honest men.

Dem. Go to: we'll do you justice.

Hegio. 'Twill become you.

Geta, conduct me into Sofrata. [Exit with Geta.]

* He was my kinsman.] In Menander, Hegio was the brother of Sofrata.

WESTERHOVIUS.

† What he advises, I will follow, Hegio.] Quod mihi de hac re dederit consilium, id sequar. Madam Dacier rejects this line, because it is also to be found in the Phormio. But it is no uncommon thing with our author to use the same expression or verse in different places, especially on familiar occasions. There is no impropriety in it here, and the foregoing hemistich is rather lame without it. The propriety of consulting Micio, or Demea's present ill-humour with him, are of no consequence. The old man is surprized at Hegio's story, does not know what to do or to say, and means to evade giving a positive answer, by saying that he would consult his brother.

S C E N E VII.

D E M E A alone.

This is no more than I foretold: and well
 If his intemperance wou'd stop here!---But this Immoderate indulgence must produce
 Some terrible misfortune in the end.
 —I'll hence, find out my brother, tell my news,
 And empty all my indignation on him. [Exit.

S C E N E VIII.

Re-enter H E G I O, speaking to Sofrata at the Door.

Be of good cheer, my Sofrata; and comfort,
 As much as in your pow'r, poor Pamphila!
 I'll find out Micio, if he's at the Forum,
 And tell him the whole story: if he'll act
 With honour in it, why 'tis well; if not,
 Let him but speak his mind to me, and then
 I shall know how to act accordingly. [Exit.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

CTESIPHO, SYRUS.

Ctes. MY father gone into the country, say you?

Syrus. Long since.

Ctes. Nay; speak the truth!

Syrus. He's at his farm,

And hard at work, I warrant you.

Ctes. I wish,

So that his health were not the worse for it,

He might so heartily fatigue himself,

As to be forc'd to keep his bed these three days!

Syrus. I wish so too; and more, if possible.

Ctes. With all my heart: for I wou'd fain consume,
As I've begun, the live-long day in pleasure.

Nor do I hate that farm of our's so much

For any thing, as that it is so near.

For if 'twas at a greater distance, night

Would come upon him, ere he could return.

But now, not finding me, I'm very sure

He'll hobble back again immed.

Question me where I've been, that I've not seen him
All the day long; and what shall I reply?

Syrus. What? can you think of nothing?

Ctes. No, not I.

Syrus. So much the worse.—Have you no client, friend,
Or guest?

Ctes. I have. What then?

Syrus. You've been engag'd
With them.

Ctes. When not engag'd? It cannot be.

Syrus. It may.

Ctes. Ay marry, for the day I grant you.
But if I pass the night here, what excuse
Then, Syrus?

Syrus. Ah! I would it were the custom
To be engag'd at night too with one's friends!
—But be at ease! I know his mind so well,
That when he raves the loudest, I can make him
As gentle as a lamb.

Ctes. How so?

Syrus. He loves
To hear you prais'd. I sing your praises to him,
And make you out a little God.

Ctes. Me!

Syrus. You.

And then the old man blubbers like a child,
For very joy.—But have a care! [looking out.

Ctes. What now?

Syrus. The wolf i'th' fable!*

Ctes. What, my father?

Syrus. He.

Ctes. What's the best, Syrus?

Syrus. In! fly! I'll take care.

Ctes. You have not seen me, if he asks: d'ye hear?

Syrus. Can't you be quiet? [pushes out Ctesipho.

S C E N E II.

Enter DEMEA at another part of the Stage.

Dem. Verily, I am

A most unhappy man! for first of all,

I cannot find my brother any where:

And then besides, in looking after him,

I chanc'd on one of my day-labourers,†

Who had but newly left my farm, and told me:

Ctesipho was not there. What shall I do?

* The wolf in the fable.] Lupus in fabulâ.
A proverb, signifying that the person, of whom we are speaking, is at hand.

† I chanc'd on one of my day-labourers.]
The poet artfully contrives to detain Demea in town, his presence being necessary in the subsequent part of the fable. DONATUS.

Ctesipho,

Ctesipho, peeping out.] Syrus?

Syrus. What?

Ctes. Does he seek me?

Syrus. Yes.

Ctes. Undone!

Syrus. Courage!

Demea, to himself.] Plague on it, what ill luck is this!

I can't account for it: but I believe

That I was born for nothing but misfortunes.

I am the first who feels our woes; the first

Who knows of them; the first who tells the news;

And come what may, I bear the weight alone.

Syrus, behind.] Ridiculous! he says he knows all first;
And he alone is ignorant of all.

Dem. I'm now return'd to see if Micio
Be yet come home again.

Ctes. peeping out.] Take care, good Syrus,
He don't rush in upon us unawares!

Syrus. Peace! I'll take care.

Ctes. 'Faith, I'll not trust to you,
But shut myself and her in some bye place
Together: that's the safest.

Syrus. Well, away! [Ctesipho disappears.
I'll drive the old man hence, I warrant you.

apart.

apart.

Dem.

Dem. seeing Syrus.] But see that rascal Syrus coming hither!

Syrus, advancing hastily, and pretending not to see Demea.]

By Hercules, there is no living here,

For any one, at this rate.---I'd fain know

How many masters I'm to have.---Oh monstrous!

Dem. What does he howl for? what's the meaning on't?

Hark ye, my good Sir! prithee tell me, if

My brother is at home.

Syrus. My good Sir! Plague!

Why do you come with your Good Sirs to me?

I'm half kill'd.

Dem. What's the matter?

Syrus. What's the matter!

Ctesipho, vengeance on him, fell upon me,

And cudgel'd me and the poor Mufick-Girl

Almost to death.

Dem. Indeed?

Syrus. Indeed. Nay see

How he has cut my lip!

[pretending to shew it.

Dem. On what account?

Syrus. The girl, he says, was bought by my advice.

Dem. Did not you say you saw him out of town
A little while ago?

Syrus. And so I did.

But he came back foon after, like a madman.
He had no mercy,---Was not he afham'd
To beat a poor old fellow? to beat Me;
Who bore him in my arms but t'other day,
An urchin thus high? [ſhewing.

Dem. Oh rare, Cteſipho!

Father's own ſon! A man, I warrant him.

Syrus. Oh rare, d'ye cry? I'faith if he is wiſe,
He'll hold his hands another time.

Dem. Oh brave!

Syrus. Oh mighty brave, indeed!---Because he beat
A helpſeſs girl, and me a wretched ſlave,
Who durſt not ſtrike again;---oh, to be ſure,
Mighty brave truly!

Dem. Oh, moſt exquisite!
My Cteſipho perceiv'd, as well as I,
That you was the contriver of this buſineſs.
---But is my brother here?

Syrus. Not he. [ſulkily.

Dem. I'm thinking
Where I ſhall ſeek him.

Syrus. I know where he is:
But I'll not tell.

Dem. How, firrah?

Syrus.

Syrus. Even so.

Dem. I'll break your head.

Syrus. I cannot tell the name
Of him he's gone to, but I know the place.

Dem. Well, where's the place?

Syrus. D'ye know the Portico
Just by the market, down this way? [pointing.

Dem. I do.

Syrus. Go up that street; keep strait along: and then You'll see a hill; go strait down that: and then
On this hand, there's a chapel; and just by
A narrow lane. [pointing.

Dem. Where? [looking.

Syrus. There; by the great wild fig-tree.
D'ye know it, Sir?

Dem. I do.

Syrus. Go through that lane.

Dem. That lane's no thoroughfare.

Syrus. Ay, very true:

No more it is, Sir.---What a fool I am!

I was mistaken.---You must go quite back
Into the Portico; and after all,
This is the nearest and the safest way.

---D'ye know Cratinus' house? the rich man?

Dem. Ay.

Syrus. * When you've pass'd that, turn short upon the left.
Keep strait along that street, and when you reach
Diana's Temple, turn upon the right.
And then, on this side of the city-gate, †
Just by the pond, there is a baker's shop,
And opposite a joiner's.---There he is.

Dem. What business has he there?

Syrus. He has bespoken
Some tables to be made with oaken legs ||
To stand the fun.

Dem. For you to drink upon.

Oh brave!---But I lose time. I'll after him. [Exit hastily.]

S C E N E I I I.

S Y R U S alone.

Ay, go your ways! I'll work your old shrunk thanks
As you deserve, old Drybones!---Æschinus

Loiters

* When you've pass'd that, turn short upon the left, &c.] It is observed by Theobald in his edition of Shakespeare, that the perplexed direction given by Lancelot seems to be copied from this of Syrus.

“ Turn up, on your right hand at the “ next turning, but, at the next turning of “ all, on your left; marry, at the very next

“ turning of no hand, but turn down indi“ rectly to the Jew's house.”

Merchant of Venice.

† The city-gate, just by the pond.] This gives us to understand that Demea would be sent quite to the further part of the town.—The pond also is naturally mentioned, for Varro

Loiters intolerably. Dinner's spoil'd. †
 Ctesipho thinks of nothing but his girl.
 'Tis time for me to look to myself too.
 Faith, then I'll in immediately; pick out
 All the tid-bits, and tossing off my cups,
 In lazy leifure lengthen out the day. [Exit.

S C E N E IV.

Enter MICIO, and HEGIO.

Micio. I can see nothing in this matter, Hegio,
 Wherein I merit so much commendation.
 'Tis but my duty, to redress the wrongs,
 That we have caus'd: unless perhaps you took me
 For one of those, who, having injur'd you,
 Term fair expostulation an affront;
 And having first offended, are the first
 To turn accusers.---I've not acted thus:

Varro tells us that near the gate was always a large pond, to water the horses, and supply the inhabitants in case of fire.

DONATUS.

|| Tables with oaken legs.] It was usual with the Græcians to sit and drink in the sun. Syrus therefore being asked a sudden question, is supposed to have sufficient prefence of mind to give this circumstantial answer, that he might the better impose on Demea. DONATUS.

† Dinner's spoil'd.] The Greeks and the Romans generally had but one repast a day, which was their supper. The dinner here mentioned was therefore an instance of luxury and debauch. DACIER.

And

And is't for this that I am thank'd?

Hegio. Ah, no;

I never thought you other than you are.
But let me beg you, Micio, go with me
To the young woman's mother, and repeat
Yourself to Her what you have just told Me;
---That the suspicion, fall'n on Æschinus,
Sprung from his brother and the Mufick-Girl.

Micio. If you believe I ought, or think it needful,
Let's go!

Hegio. 'Tis very kind in you: for thus
You'll raise her spirit drooping with the load
Of grief and misery, and have perform'd
Ev'ry good office of benevolence.
But if you like it not, I'll go myself,
And tell her the whole story.

Micio. No, I'll go.

Hegio. 'Tis good and tender in your nature, Micio.

* For they, whose fortunes are less prosperous,
Are all, I know not how, the more suspicious;

* For they whose fortunes, &c.] This fine sentiment is supposed to be built on the following lines of Menander. If so, I think our poet has improved on his original.

Προς απάντα δειλὸς ὁ πένης ἐστὶ πραγμαῖα,
Καὶ πάντας αὖτις καταφρονεῖν ὑπολαμβάνει.

Ὁ δὲ μετρίως πράττων περισκελεστέρον
Ἀπάντα τ' ἀνιάρᾳ, Λαμπρία, φέρει.

The poor man in all things acts fearfully,
Suspecting all despise him. But the man
Who's more at ease, with greater constancy
Bears up against misfortunes, Lamprias!

And think themselves neglected and contemn'd,
Because of their distrefs and poverty.

Wherefore I think 'twould satisfy, them more,
If you would clear up this affair yourself.

Micio. What you have said is just, and very true.

Hegio. Let me conduct you in!

Micio. With all my heart. [Exeunt.

S C E N E V.

Æ S C H I N U S alone.

Oh torture to my mind! that this misfortune
Should come thus unexpectedly upon me!
I know not what to do, which way to turn.
Fear shakes my limbs, amazement fills my soul,
And in my breast despair shuts out all counsel.
Ah, by what means can I acquit myself?
Such a suspicion is now fallen on me;
And that so grounded on appearances.
Softrata thinks that on my own account
I bought the Mufick-Girl. That's plain enough
From the old nurse. For meeting her by chance,
As she was sent from hence to call a midwife,

I ran, and ask'd her of my Pamphila.

---“ Is she in labour? are you going now

“ To call a midwife?”---“ Go, go, Æschinus!

“ Away, you have deceiv'd us long enough,

“ Fool'd us enough with your fine promises,”

Cried she.---“ What now?” says I.—“ Farewel, enjoy

“ The girl that you're so taken with!”—I saw

Immediately their cause of jealousy :

Yet I contain'd myself, nor would disclose

My brother's business to a tattling gossip,

By whom the knowledge on't might be betray'd.

—But what shall I do now? shall I confess

The girl to be my brother's; an affair

Which should by no means be reveal'd?—But not

To dwell on that.---Perhaps they'd not disclose it :

Nay I much doubt if they would credit it :

So many proofs concur against Myself.---

I bore her off; I paid the money down ;

She was brought home to Me.---All this, I own,

Is my own fault. For should I not have told

My father, be it as it might, the whole?

I shou'd, I doubt not, have obtain'd his leave

To marry Pamphila.---What indolence,

Ev'n till this hour! now, Æschinus, awake!

---But first I'll go, and clear myself to Them.
 I'll to the door. [goes up.]---Confusion! how I tremble!
 How guilty like I seem, when I approach
 This house! [knocks.] Hola! within! 'Tis I;
 'Tis Æschinus. Come, open somebody
 The door immediately!---Who's here? A stranger!
 I'll step aside. [retires.]

S C E N E VI.

Enter MICIO.

Micio, to Sofrata within.] Do as I've told you, Sofrata.
 I'll find out Æschinus, and tell him all.
 ---But who knock'd at the door? [coming forward.
Æsch. behind.] By heav'n, my father!
 Confusion!
Micio, seeing him.] Æschinus!
Æsch. What does he here? [aside.]
Micio. Was't you that knock'd?---What, not a word!
 I banter him a little. He deserves it, [Suppose
 For never trusting this affair to me. [aside.]
 ---Why don't you speak?
Æsch. Not I, as I remember. [disorder'd.]

Micio. No, I dare say, not you : for I was wond'ring
What business could have brought you here.---He blushes.
All's safe, I find. [aside.

Æsch. recovering.] But prithee, tell me, Sir,
What brought you here ?

Micio. No business of my own.
But a friend drew me hither from the Forum,
To be his advocate.

Æsch. In what ?

Micio. I'll tell you.
This house is tenanted by some poor women,
Whom, I believe, you know not ;---Nay, I'm sure on't,
For 'twas but lately they came over hither.

Æsch. Well ?

Micio. A young woman and her mother.

Æsch. Well ?

Micio. The father's dead.---This friend of mine, it seems,
Being her next relation, by the law
Is forc'd to marry her. *

Æsch. Confusion ! [aside.

* By the law is forc'd to marry her.] This appears in many instances to have been a law in force with the Athenians, and was probably handed down to them by the Phœnicians, who originally received it from the Jews. And every daughter that possesses an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers. Numbers, Chap. xxxvi. v. 8. DACIER.

Micio. How?

Æsch. Nothing.---Well?---pray go on, Sir!---

Micio. He's now come

To take her home, for he lives at Miletus.*

Æsch. How! take her home with him?

Micio. Yes, take her home.

Æsch. What! to Miletus?

Micio. Ay.

Æsch. Oh torture! [aside]---Well?

What say the women?

Micio. Why, what shou'd they? Nothing.

Indeed the mother has devis'd a tale

About her daughter's having had a child

By some one else, but never mentions whom:

His claim, she says, is prior; and my friend

Ought not to have her.

Æsch. Well? and did not this

Seem a sufficient reason?

Micio. No.

Æsch. No, Sir?

And shall this next relation take her off?

Micio. Ay, to be sure: why not?

Æsch. Oh barbarous, cruel!

* Miletus.] A colony of the Athenians in Pontus. DONATUS.

And---to speak plainly, Sir,---ungenerous!

Micio. Why so?

Æsch. Why so, Sir?---What d'ye think
Will come of Him, the poor unhappy youth
Who was connected with her first;---who still Loves her, perhaps, as dearly as his life;---
When he shall see her torn out of his arms,
And born away for ever?---Oh shame, shame! [gave her?

Micio. Where is the shame on't?---* Who betroth'd, who When was she married? and to whom? Where is he,
And wherefore did he wed another's right?

Æsch. Was it for Her, a girl of such an age,
To sit at home, expecting till a kinsman
Came, nobody knows whence, to marry her?
---This, Sir, it was your business to have said,
And to have dwelt on it.

Micio. Ridiculous!
Should I have pleaded against Him, to whom
I came an advocate?---But after all,
What's this affair to Us? or, what have we
To do with them? let's go!---Ha! why those tears?

* Who betroth'd, &c.] These questions, which enumerate all the proofs requisite to a marriage, are an indirect, and very delicate reproof of Æschinus for the irregular and clandestine manner in which he had conducted this affair. DONATUS.

Æsch.

Æsch. Father, beseech you, hear me !

Micio. Æschinus,

I have heard all, and I know all, already :
For I do love you ; wherefore all your actions
Touch me the more.

Æsch. So may you ever love me,
And so may I deserve your love, my father,
As I am sorry to have done this fault,
And am ashamed to see you !

Micio. I believe it ;
For well I know you have a liberal mind :
But I'm afraid you are too negligent.
For in what city do you think you live ?
You have abus'd a virgin, whom the law
Forbad your touching.---'Twas a fault, a great one ;
But yet a natural failing. Many others,
Some not bad men, have often done the same.
---But after this event, can you pretend
You took the least precaution ? or consider'd
What should be done, or how ?---If shame forbid
Your telling me Yourself, you should have found
Some other means to let me know of it.
Lost in these doubts, ten months have flit away.
You have betray'd, as far as in you lay,

Yourself,

Yourself, the poor young woman, and your child.
 What! did you think the Gods wou'd bring about
 This business in your sleep; and that your wife,
 Without your stir, would be convey'd to you
 Into your bed-chamber?---I wou'd not have you
 Thus negligent in other matters.——Come,
 Cheer up, son! you shall wed her.

Æsch. How!

Micio. Cheer up,

I say!

Æsch. Nay, prithee, do not mock me, father!

Micio. Mock you? I? wherefore? *

Æsch. I don't know; unless
 That I so much desire it may be true,
 I therefore fear it more.

Micio. ---Away; go home;
 And pray the Gods, that you may call your wife.
 Away!

Æsch. How's that? my wife? what! now?

Micio. Now.

* Mock you? I? wherefore?] We may very innocently banter a friend, and frighten him with false alarms, when it is in our power to undeceive him immediately, and to surprise him with good news. But none but an enemy would buoy one up with false hopes, in order to dash them with bitterness and trouble. Micio therefore discovers a benevolent emotion at even being supposed to trifle with him in this respect. DONATUS.

Æsch.

Æsch. Now?

Micio. Ev'n now, as soon as possible.

Æsch. May all

The Gods desert me, Sir, but I do love you,
More than my eyes!

Micio. Than her?

Æsch. As well.

Micio. That's much.

Æsch. But where is that Milesian?

Micio. Gone:

Vanish'd: on board the ship.---But why d'ye loiter?

Æsch. Ah, Sir, you rather go, and pray the Gods;
For, being a much better man than I,
They will the sooner hear your pray'rs.*

* The sooner hear your prayers.] Donatus observes that there is great delicacy in this compliment of Æschinus to Micio, which, though made to his face, does not carry in it the least appearance of flattery. Madam Dacier imagines Terence refers here to a line in Hesiod, which says that it is the business of old men to pray. I should rather imagine our author had an eye to the following fine lines of Menander, which have already been recommended to the publick notice by the learned critick in the Adventurer, No. 105.

Εἰ τις δὲ θυσιᾶν προσφέρων, ὦ Παμφίλει,
Ταυρῶν τε πληθὸς ἢ εἰρῶν, ἢ, γῆ Δία,
Ἑτέρων τοιῶν, ἢ κατασκευασµατὰ
Χρυσᾶς ποιήσας χλαμυδὸς ἢ τοὶ πορφύρας,
Ἡ δὲ ἐλεφαντίνος, ἢ σµαραγδῆ ζωδιᾶ,
Εὐνὴν νομίζει τὸν Θεὸν καθίσταται,
Πλῆνατ' ἐκεῖνος, καὶ φρενᾶς κρυφᾶς ἔχει.

Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ἀνδρὰ χρησίµον πεφικέναι,
Μὴ παρθένος φθειρόντα, μὴ μοιχῶµενον,
Κλεπτόντα καὶ σφαίτοῦλα χρηµάτων χαρὶν.
Μὴδὲ βελόνης ἐναµµὶ ἐπιδυµῆς, Παμφίλει,
Ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς βλέπει σὲ πλῆσιον παρών.

The man who sacrifices, Pamphilus,
A multitude of bulls, or goats, or sheep;
Or prepares golden vestments, purple raiment,
Figures of ivory, or precious gems;
Thinking to render God propitious to him,
Most grossly errs, and bears an empty mind.
Let him be good and charitable rather,
No doer of uncleanness, no corrupter
Of virgin innocence, no murd'rer, robber,
In quest of gain. Covet not, Pamphilus,
† Even a needful of thread, for God,
Who's always near thee, always sees thy deeds.

† This seems to have been a proverbial expression, as we find it occur in another fragment of Menander.

Micio.

Micio. I'll in,
 To see the needful preparations made.
 You, if you're wife, do as I said. [Exit.

S C E N E VII.

ÆSCHINUS alone.

How's this?
 Is this to be a father? Or is this
 To be a son?---Were he my friend or brother,
 Could he be more complacent to my wish?
 Should I not love him? bear him in my bosom?
 Ah! his great kindness has so wrought upon me,
 That it shall be the study of my life
 To shun all follies, * lest they give him pain.
 ---But I'll in strait, that I may not retard
 My marriage by my own delay. [Exit.

S C E N E

* To shun all follies.] Donatus justly observes, that it is plain from this soliloquy, that Terence takes the part of mild fathers, meaning to shew that gentle reproofs, mingled with tenderness, will have more effect on an ingenuous mind than railing and severity. That critick also is more minute than usual in pointing out the great beauties of the foregoing scene; commenting on almost every speech, and observing how finely the two characters of Micio and Æschinus are sustained throughout their whole conversation. It was impossible to lay before the English reader all the little particularities dwelt upon by Donatus: and indeed the reader must have very little sensibility, who cannot of himself discern, even through the medium of this translation, the many amiable touches of good-humour, mildness, and affection that distinguish Micio's character, as well as the

S C E N E VIII.

D E M E A alone.

I'm tir'd

With walking.—Now great Jove confound you, Syrus;

You and your blind directions! I have crawl'd

All the town over: to the gate; the pond;

Where not? No sign of any shop was there,

Nor any person who had seen my brother.

—Now I'll in therefore and fet up my rest

In his own house, till he comes home again. [going.]

S C E N E IX.

Enter M I C I O.Micio. I'll go and let the women know we're ready.Dem. But here he is.—I have long fought you, Micio.Micio. What now?Dem. I bring you more offences; great ones;
Of that sweet youth——

the natural strokes of passion, and ingenuous flame in Æschinus. The whole scene is remarkably beautiful, and perhaps more charafteristick of the genius of Terence than any other in his works.

Micio. See there!

Dem. New; capital!

Micio. Nay, nay, no more!

Dem. Ah, you don't know——

Micio. I do.

Dem. O fool, you think I mean the Mufick-Girl.

This is a rape upon a citizen.

Micio. I know it.

Dem. How? d'ye know it, and endure it?

Micio. Why not endure it?

Dem. Tell me, don't you rave?

Don't you go mad?

Micio. No; to be fure I'd rather——

Dem. There's a child born.

Micio. Heav'n blefs it!

Dem. And the girl

Has nothing.

Micio. I have heard fo.

Dem. And is He

To marry her without a fortune?

Micio. Ay.

Dem. What's to be done then?

Micio. What the cafe requires.

The girl fhall be brought over here.

Dem.

Dem. Oh Jove!

Can that be proper?

Micio. What can I do else?

Dem. What can you do?—If you're not really griev'd,
It were at least your duty to appear so.

Micio. I have contracted the young woman to him :
The thing is settled : 'tis their wedding-day :
And all their apprehensions I've remov'd.
This is still more my duty.

Dem. Are you pleas'd then
With this adventure, Micio?

Micio. Not at all,
If I could help it : now 'tis past all cure,
I bear it patiently. The life of man *
Is like a game at tables. If the cast
Which is most necessary, be not thrown,
That, which chance sends, you must correct by art.

Dem. Oh rare Corrector !---By your art no less Than Twenty Minæ have been thrown away
On yonder Mufick-Wench ; who, out of hand,

* The life of man is like a game at tables.] Menander might possibly borrow this moral maxim from a passage in the tenth book of Plato's Republic, where it is said, " That

" we should take counsel from accidents,
" and, as in a game at dice, act according " to what has fallen, in that manner which
" reason directs us to be the best."

DACIER.

Must be sent packing; if no buyer, gratis.

Micio. Not in the least; nor do I mean to sell her. *

Dem. What will you do then!

Micio. Keep her in my house.

Dem. Oh heav'n and earth! a harlot and a wife

In the same house!

Micio. Why not?

Dem. Have you your wits?

Micio. Truly I think so.

Dem. Now, so help me heav'n,

Seeing your folly, I believe you keep her

To sing with you.

Micio. Why not?

Dem. And the young bride

Shall be her pupil?

Micio. To be sure.

Dem. And you

Dance hand in hand with them? †

Micio. Ay.

* Not in the least, nor do I mean to sell her.] Micio is here involved in a ridiculous dilemma, in which he had rather appear absurd, than betray Ctesipho. DONATUS.

† Dance hand in hand with them.] Reftim ductans saltabis. Reftim ducere; literally, to lead the chord: which would induce one to imagine that when many persons were dancing together in those days, they held a chord--- but why a cord? might they not as well take hold of each other's hands? I am persuaded that they did, and agree with Donatus that the expression is merely metaphorical. DACIER.

Dem. Ay?

Micio. And you

Make one amongst us too upon occasion.

Dem. Ah! are you not aham'd on't?

Micio. Patience, Demea!

Lay by your wrath, and seem, as it becomes you,
Chearful and free of heart at your son's wedding.

—I'll but speak with the bride and Sostrata,

And then return to you immediately. [Exit.

S C E N E X.

D E M E A alone.

Jove, what a life! what manners! what distraction!

A Bride just coming home without a portion;

A Mufick-Girl already there in keeping;

A house of waste; the youth, a libertine;

Th' old man, a dotard!—'Tis not in the pow'r

Of Providence herself, howe'er desirous,

To save from ruin such a family.

S C E N E

SCENE XI.

Enter at a distance SYRUS drunk.

Syrus, to himself.] Faith, little Syrus, you've ta'en special care
Of your sweet self, and play'd your part most rarely.
—Well, go your ways:—but having had my fill
Of ev'ry thing within, I've now march'd forth
To take a turn or two abroad.

Dem. behind.] Look there!
A pattern of instruction!

Syrus, seeing him.] But see there:
Yonder's old Demea. [going up to him.] What's the matter
And why so melancholy? [now?

Dem. Oh thou villain!

Syrus. What! are you spouting sentences, old Wisdom?

Dem. Were you my servant——

Syrus. You'd be plaguy rich,
And settle your affairs most wonderfully.

Dem. I'd make you an example.

Syrus. Why? for what?

Dem. Why, firrah?—* In the midst of this disturbance,

* In the midst of this disturbance, &c.] The gravity of Demea and drunkenness of Syrus admirably calculated to excite mirth in the spectators. DONATUS.
create a very humorous contrast, and are

And in the heat of a most heavy crime,
While all is yet confusion, you've got drunk,
As if for joy, you rascal!

Syrus. Why the plague
Did not I keep within? [aside.]

S C E N E X I I .

Enter D R O M O hastily.

Dromo. Here! hark ye, Syrus!
Ctesipho begs that you'd come back.

Syrus. Away! [pushing him off.]

Dem. What's this he says of Ctesipho?

Syrus. Pshaw! nothing.

Dem. How, dog, is Ctesipho within?

Syrus. Not he.

Dem. Why does he name him then?

Syrus. It is another
Of the same name---a little parasite---
D'ye know him?

Dem. But I will immediately. [going.]

Syrus, stopping him.] What now? where now?

Dem. Let me alone.

Syrus. Don't go!

} struggling.

Dem.

Dem. Hands off! what won't you? must I brain you, rascal?

[disengages himself from Syrus, and Exit.]

S C E N E XIII.

S Y R U S alone.

He's gone—gone in---and faith no welcome roarer--- *

---Especially to Ctesiphon.---But what

Can I do now; unless till this blows over,

I sneak into some corner, and sleep off

This wine that lies upon my head?---I'll do't.

[Exit reeling.]

S C E N E XIV.

Enter MICIO from Sostrata.

Micio, to Sostrata within.]

All is prepar'd: and we are ready, Sostrata,

As I've already told you, when you please. [comes forward.]

But who's this † forces open our street-door

With so much violence?

Enter

* No welcome roarer.—] Comissatorem haud sane commodum. The chief beauty lies in the word Comissator, which signified one who came to join a jovial party, bursting in upon them unexpectedly with much noise and clamour. DONATUS. DACIER.

† Forces open our street-door, &c.] I forgot to observe before, that in Athens the street-

Enter D E M E A on t'other side.

Dem. Confusion ! death !

What shall I do ? or how resolve ? where vent
My cries and exclamations ?---Heav'n ! Earth ! Sea !

Micio, behind.] So ! all's discover'd : that's the thing he raves at.
---Now for a quarrel !---* I must help the boy.

Dem. seeing him.] Oh, there's the grand corrupter of our children !

Micio. Appease your wrath, and be yourself again !

Dem. Well, I've appeas'd it ; I'm myself again ;
I spare reproaches ; let us to the point !
It was agreed between us, and it was
Your own proposal too, that you shou'd never Concern yourself with Ctesipho, nor I
With Æschinus. Say, was't not so ?

Micio. It was ;

doors were made to open outwards ; so that when any one was coming out, the noise of the door (which is often mentioned in these comedies) served to give notice to those in the street, that they might escape being hurt, and make way for the opening of the door.

DACIER.

* I must help the boy.] The character of Micio appears extremely amiable through the four first acts of this comedy, and his behaviour is in many respects worthy imitation.

But his conduct in conniving at the irregularities of Ctesipho, and even assisting him to support them, is certainly reprehensible.
Perhaps the Poet threw this shade over his virtues, on purpose to shew that mildness and good-humour might be carried to an excess.

I don't deny it.

Dem. Why does Ctesipho
Revel with you then? Why do you receive him?
Buy him a mistress, Micio?---Is not justice
My due from you, as well as your's from me?
Since I do not concern myself with your's,
Meddle not you with mine!

Micio. This is not fair;
Indeed it is not. Think on the old saying,
"All things are common among friends."

Dem. How smart!
Put off with quips and sentences at last?

Micio. Nay, hear me, if you can have patience, Demea.
---First, if you're griev'd at their extravagance,
Let this reflexion calm you! Formerly,
You bred them both according to your fortune,
Supposing it sufficient for them both:
Then too you thought that I shou'd take a wife.
Still follow the old rule you then laid down:
Hoard, scrape, and save; do ev'ry thing you can
To leave them nobly! Be that glory your's.
My fortune, fall'n beyond their hopes upon them,
Let them use freely! As your capital
Will not be wasted, what addition comes

From mine, consider as clear gain : and thus,
Weighing all this impartially, you'll spare
Yourself, and me, and them, a world of trouble.

Dem. Money is not the thing : their morals —

Micio. Hold !

I understand ; and meant to speak of that.

* There are in nature fundry marks, good Demea,
By which you may conjecture easily,
That when two persons do the self-same thing,
It oftentimes falls out, that in the one
'Tis criminal, in t'other 'tis not so :
Not that the thing itself is different,
But he who does it.---In these youths I see
The marks of virtue ; and, I trust, they'll prove
Such as we wish them. They have sense, I know ;
Attention ; in its season, liberal shame ;
And fondness for each other ; all sure signs
Of an ingenuous mind and noble nature :
And tho' they stray, you may at any time
Reclaim them.---But perhaps you fear, they'll prove

* There are in nature, &c.] Madam Dacier makes an observation on this speech something like that of Donatus on one of Micio's above ; and says that Micio, being hard put to it by the real circumstances of the case, thinks to confound Demea by a nonsensical galimatia. I cannot be of the ingenious lady's opinion in this matter : for I think a more sensible speech could not be made, nor a better plea offered in favour of the young men, than that of Micio in the present instance.

Too inattentive to their interest.

Oh my dear Demea, in all matters else

Increase of years increases wisdom in us:

This only vice age brings along with it;

“ We’re all more worldly-minded, than there’s need :”

Which passion age, that kills all passions else,

Will ripen in your sons too.

Dem. Have a care

That these fine arguments, and this great mildness

Don’t prove the ruin of us, Micio!

Micio. Peace!

It shall not be: away with all your fears!

This day be rul’d by me: come, smooth your brow.

Dem. Well, since at present things are so, I must.

But then I’ll to the country with my son

To-morrow, at first peep of day.

Micio. At midnight,

So you’ll but smile to-day.

Dem. And that wench too

I’ll drag away with me.

Micio. Ay; there you’ve hit it.

For by that means you’ll keep your son at home;

Do but secure her.

Dem. I’ll see that: for there

I'll put her in the kitchen and the mill,
And make her full of ashes, smoak, and meal:
Nay at high noon too she shall gather stubble.
I'll burn her up, and make her black as coal.

Micio. Right! now you're wife.---And then I'd make my son Go to bed to her, tho' against his will.

Dem. D'ye laugh at me? how happy in your temper!
I feel ——

Micio. Ah! that again?

Dem. I've done.

Micio. In then!

And let us fuit our humour to the time. [Exeunt.

ACT V. SCENE I. *

DEMEA alone.

NEVER did man lay down so fair a plan,
 So wise a rule of life, but fortune, age,
 Or long experience made some change in it;
 And taught him, that those things he thought he knew,

* Act. 5. Scene 1.] This scene, which I have placed the first of the fifth act, stands in Madam Dacier's translation, and in all those editions and translations who have followed her, as the second. I think it is plain from the end of the foregoing scene, that Micio and Demea quitted the stage, and entered the house together; and it seems to be equally evident, from the message that Syrus brings to Demea in the scene immediately succeeding this, that Demea had left the company within---Rogat frater, ne abeas longius---your brother begs, you'd not go further off. But what had still more weight with me, and was a more forcible motive to induce me to begin the fifth act with this soliloquy, was the propriety, and indeed necessity of an interval in this place. The total change of character, whether real or affected, is in itself so extraordinary, that it required all the art of Terence to bring it about; and the only probable method, of effecting it, is to suppose it the result at least of some little deliberation, and reflection on the inconveniencies he had experienced from a contrary temper. Donatus observes the great art with which Terence has preserved the gradation of Demea's anger and distresses, which can be pushed no further than the discovery of Ctesipho; and this admirable climax of incidents, if I may hazard the expression, is finely completed in the scene with which I have closed the fourth act. To say the truth, the fable itself in a manner ends there; and though there is much humour and pleasantry in the remaining part of the play, yet many good critics have objected to it. Terence however, or rather Menander, must be allowed to have shewn an uncommon effort of genius, if not of judgment, in these adscititious scenes, which he has founded on the conversion of Demea: a circumstance which grows out of the foregoing incidents, and supplies the materials for a pleasant fifth act, like the Giving away the Rings in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, in which play also, as well as this of Terence, the main business of the plot is concluded in the fourth act.

He

He did not know, and what he held as best,
In practice he threw by. The very thing
That happens to myself. For that hard life
Which I have ever led, my race near run,
Now in the last stage, I renounce: and why?
But that by dear experience I've been told,
There's nothing so advantages a man,
As mildness and complacency. Of this
My brother and myself are living proofs:
He always led an easy, chearful life;
Good-humour'd, mild, offending nobody,
Smiling on all; a jovial batchelor,
His whole expences center'd in himself.
I, on the contrary, rough, rigid, cross,
Saving, morose, and thrifty, took a wife:
---What miseries did marriage bring!---had children;
---A new uneasiness!---and then besides,
Striving all ways to make a fortune for them,
I have worn out my prime of life and health:
And now, my course near finish'd, what return
Do I receive for all my toil? Their hate.
Meanwhile my brother, without any care,
Reaps all a father's comforts. Him they love,
Me they avoid: to him they open all.

Their

Their secret counsels ; doat on him ; and both
 Repair to him ; while I am quite forsaken.
 His life they pray for, but expect my death.
 Thus those, brought up by my exceeding labour,
 He, at a small expence, has made his own :
 The care all mine, and all the pleasure his.
 ---Well then, let Me endeavour in my turn
 To teach my tongue civility, to give
 With open-handed generosity,
 Since I am challeng'd to't!---and let Me too
 Obtain the love and reverence of my children !
 And if 'tis bought by bounty and indulgence,
 I will not be behind-hand.---Cash will fail :
 What's that to me, who am the eldest-born ?

S C E N E I I.

Enter S Y R U S.

Syrus. Oh Sir ! your brother has dispatch'd me to you
 To beg you'd not go further off.

Dem. Who's there ?——

* What, honest Syrus! save you: how is't with you?
How goes it?

Syrus. Very well, Sir.

Demea, aside.] Excellent!

Now for the first time I, against my nature,
Have added these three phrases, "Honest Syrus!
"How is't?---How goes it?"---[to Syrus.] You have prov'd
A worthy servant. I'll reward you for it. [yourself]

Syrus. I thank you, Sir.

Dem. I will, I promise you;
And you shall be convinc'd on't very soon.

S C E N E III.

Enter G E T A.

Geta, to Sostrata within.] Madam, I'm going to look after
That they may call the bride immediately. [them, —But here is Demea. Save you!

Dem. Oh! your name?

Geta. Geta, Sir.

Dem. Geta, I this day have found you

* What, honest Syrus.] Here the Poet shews how awkwardly a man of an opposite disposition endeavours to be complaisant;

and that a miser, meaning to be generous,
runs into profusion. DONATUS.

To be a fellow of uncommon worth :
 For sure that servant's faith is well approv'd
 Who holds his master's interest at heart,
 As I perceiv'd that you did, Geta ! wherefore,
 Soon as occasion offers, I'll reward you.
 ---I am endeavouring to be affable,
 And not without success. [aside.]

Geta. 'Tis kind in you
 To think of your poor slave, Sir.

Dem. aside.] First of all
 I court the mob, and win them by degrees.

S C E N E I V.

Enter ÆSCHINUS.

Æsch. They murder me with their delays ; and while
 They lavish all this pomp upon the nuptials,
 They waste the live-long day in preparation.

Dem. How does my son ?

Æsch. My father ! Are you here ?

Dem. Ay, by affection, and by blood your father,
 Who love you better than my eyes.---But why
 Do you not call the bride ?

Æsch.

Æsch. 'Tis what I long for :

But wait the musick and the fingers.

Dem. Pfhaw !

Will you for once be rul'd by an old fellow ?

Æsch. Well ?

Dem. * Ne'er mind fingers, company, lights, musick ;
But tell them to throw down the garden-wall,
As soon as possible. Convey the bride
That way, and lay both houses into one.
Bring too the mother, and whole family,
Over to us.

Æsch. I will. Oh charming father !

Dem. aside.] Charming ! See there ! He calls me charming
---My brother's house will be a thorough-fare ; [now.
Throng'd with whole crouds of people ; much expence
Will follow ; very much : what's that to me ?
I am call'd charming, and get into favour.
---Ho ! order Babylo immediately †
To pay him Twenty Minæ.---Prithee, Syrus,

3 G 2

Why

* Ne'er mind fingers, &c.] The bride was usually thus attended, and Lucian speaks of this retinue, and I believe took the passage from Menander, where he says, Και αλλητριδας, και θορυβον, και υμνουν αδοντας τινας, &c. "the players on the flute, the company, and fingers of the nuptial song."

DACIER.

† Ho ! order Babylo immediately to pay him Twenty Minæ.] Jube nunc jam dinumeret illi Babylo viginti minas. All the commentators and translators have been extremely puzzled at this passage. It does not become the last comer to be positive, where so many conjectures have already been offered and rejected. But if one may determine from the context,

Why don't you execute your orders?

Syrus. What?

Dem. Down with the wall!---[Exit Syrus.]--You Geta, go,
The ladies over. [and bring

Geta. Heaven blefs you, Demea,
For all your friendship to our family! [Exit Geta.

Dem. They're worthy of it.---What fay You to this? [to Æsch.

Æsch. I think it admirable.

Dem. 'Tis much better,
Than for a poor foul, fick, and lying-in,
To be conducted thro' the ftreet.

Æsch. I never Saw any thing concerted better, Sir.

Dem. 'Tis juft my way.---But here comes Micio.

S C E N E V.

Enter M I C I O.

Micio, at entering.] My brother order it, d'ye fay? where is he?
---Was this your order, Demea?

context, which is commonly the beft way as well as the moft natural and obvious, it fhould feem that Demea means to give an order to one of his fervants to give Æschinus Twenty Minæ. He has already determined to be very generous, and another inftance of his bounty occurs in the laft fcene, where he pays down the money for the freedom of Phrygia.—In this very fpeech he is pleafantly confidering within himfelf the expence, which he difregards fo as he can but get into favour. In confequence of which refolution it is natural to fuppofe that he immediately gives an order for iffuing money to defray the charges of pulling down walls, entertaining company, &c.

Dem. 'Twas my order ;
And by this means, and every other way,
I would unite, serve, cherish, and oblige,
And join the family to our's !

Æsch. Pray do, Sir ! [to Micio.

Micio. I don't oppose it.

Dem. Nay, but 'tis our duty.

First, there's the mother of the bride —

Micio. What then ?

Dem. Worthy and modest.

Micio. So they say.

Dem. In years.

Micio. True.

Dem. And so far advanc'd, that she is long
Past child-bearing, a poor lone woman too,
With none to comfort her.

Micio. What means all this ?

Dem. This woman 'tis your place to marry, brother ;
---And your's [to Æsch.] to bring him to't.

Micio. I marry her ?

Dem. You.

Micio. I ?

Dem. Yes, you I say.

Micio. Ridiculous !

Dem.

Dem. to Æsch.] If you're a man, he'll do't.

Æsch. to Micio.] Dear father!

Micio. How!

Do you then join him, fool?

Dem. Nay, don't deny.

It can't be otherwise.

Micio. You've lost your senses!

Æsch. Let me prevail upon you, Sir!

Micio. You're mad.

Away!

Dem. Oblige your son.

Micio. Have you your wits?

I a new-married man at fixty-five!

And marry a decrepid poor old woman!

Is that what you advise me?

Æsch. Do it, Sir!

I've promis'd them.

Micio. You've promis'd them indeed!

Prithee, boy, promise for yourself.

Dem. Come, come!

What if he ask'd still more of you?

Micio. As if

This was not ev'n the utmost.

Dem. Nay, comply!

Æsch. Be not obdurate!

Dem. Come, come, promise him.

Micio. Won't you desist?

Æsch. No, not till I prevail.

Micio. This is mere force.

Dem. Nay, nay, comply, good Micio!

Micio. Tho' this appears to me absurd, wrong, foolish,
And quite repugnant to my scheme of life,
Yet, if you're so much bent on't, let it be!

Æsch. * Obliging father, worthy my best love!

Dem. aside.] What now?---This answers to my wish.---

What more?

---Hegio's their kinsman, [to Micio.] our relation too,
And very poor. We shou'd do him some service.

Micio. Do what?

* Obliging father!] Obliging indeed!

The Poet's conduct here is justly liable to censure: the only consideration that can be urged in his defence is, that he meant to shew the inconveniencies arising from too unbounded a good-nature. But Micio has all along been represented so agreeable, and possessed of so much judgment, good sense, and knowledge of the world, that this last piece of extravagance must shock probability, and offend the delicacy of the spectator.

PATRICK.

Apud Menandrum senex de nuptiis non gravatur. Ergo Terentius εὐπνίμων.

DONATUS.

It is surprising that none of the critics on this passage have taken notice of this observation of Donatus, especially as our loss of Menander makes it rather curious. It is plain that Terence in the plan of this last act followed Menander: and in the present circumstance though he has adopted the absurdity of marrying Micio to the old lady, yet we learn from Donatus that he rather improved on his original by making Micio express a repugnance to such a match, which it seems he did not in the play of Menander.

Dem. There is a little piece of ground,
Which you let out near town. Let's give it him
To live upon.

Micio. So little, do you call it?

Dem. Well, if 'tis large, let's give it. He has been Father to Her; a good man; our relation.
It will be given worthily. In short,
That saying, Micio, I now make my own,
Which you so lately and so wisely quoted;
"It is the common failing of old men,
"To be too much intent on worldly matters."
Let us wipe off that stain. The saying's true,
And should be practis'd.

Micio. Well, well; be it so,
If he requires it. [pointing to Æsch.

Æsch. I beseech it, father.

Dem. Now you're indeed my brother, soul and body.

Micio. I'm glad to find you think me so.

Dem. I foil him
At his own weapons. [aside.

S C E N E

S C E N E VI.

To them SYRUS.

Syrus. I have executed
Your orders, Demea.

Dem. A good fellow!—Truly
Syrus, I think, shou'd be made free to-day.

Micio. Made free! He?—Wherefore?

Dem. Oh, for many reasons.

Syrus. Oh Demea, you're a noble gentleman.
I've taken care of both your sons from boys;
Taught them, instructed them, and given them
The wholesomest advice, that I was able.

Dem. The thing's apparent: and these offices,
To cater;---bring a wench in, safe and snug;
---Or* in mid-day prepare an entertainment;---
---All these are talents of no common man.

Syrus. Oh most delightful gentleman!

Dem. Besides,

* In mid-day prepare an entertainment.] Apparare de die convivium. The force of this passage consists in the words de die, because, as has been observed in another place, the chief meal of the Græcians was at supper, and an entertainment in the day-time was considered as a debauch.

DACIER.

He has been instrumental too this day
 In purchasing the Mufick-Girl. He manag'd
 The whole affair. We shou'd reward him for it.
 It will encourage others.*---In a word,
 Your Æschinus would have it so.

Micio. Do you
 Desire it?

Æsch. Yes, Sir.

Micio. Well if you desire it ——
 Come hither, Syrus!---Be thou free!

[Syrus kneels; Micio strikes him, being the ceremony of manumission, or giving a Slave his freedom.]

Syrus. I thank you:

Thanks to you all; but most of all, to Demea!

Dem. I'm glad of your good fortune.

Æsch. So am I.

Syrus. I do believe it; and I wish this joy
 Were quite complete, and I might see my wife,
 My Phrygia too, made free as well as I.

Dem. The very best of women!

Syrus. And the first
 That suckled my young master's son, your grandson.

* It will encourage others.] The grave irony of this passage is extremely humorous.
 DONATUS.

Dem. Indeed! the first who suckled him!---Nay then,
Beyond all doubt, she should be free.

Micio. For what?

Dem. For that. Nay, take the sum, whate'er it be,
Of Me.

Syrus. Now all the pow'rs above grant all
Your wishes, Demea!

Micio. You have thriv'd to-day
Most rarely, Syrus.

Dem. And besides this, Micio,
It wou'd be handsome to advance him something
To try his fortune with. He'll soon return it.

Micio. Not that. [snapping his fingers.]

Æsch. He's honest.

Syrus. Faith, I will return it.
Do but advance it.

Æsch. Do, Sir!

Micio. Well, I'll think on't.

Dem. I'll see that he shall do't. [to Syrus.]

Syrus. Thou best of men!

Æsch. My most indulgent father!

Micio. What means this?

Whence comes this hasty change of manners, Brother?

* Whence flows all this extravagance? and whence
This sudden prodigality?

Dem. I'll tell you:

† To shew you, that the reason, why our sons

Think

* Whence flows all this extravagance? &c.]
Quod proluvium? quæ istæ subita est largitas?
A passage borrowed from the comick poet
Cæcilius. DACIER.

† To shew you that the reason, &c.] I would have characters separated from each other;
but I must own that a direct contrast displeases me.

But the most sure method to spoil a play, and to render it quite insupportable, would be to multiply such contrasts.

See what would be the result of these antitheses. I call them Antitheses; for the contrast of character is, in the plan of the drama, what that figure is in conversation.
It is happy; but it must be used with moderation; and in an elevated stile, totally excluded.

What is the most common state of society, that where characters are contrasted, or where they are only different?

What is the intention of contrast in character? Doubtless to render one of the two more striking. But that effect can only be obtained, where they both appear together.
What a monotony will this create in the dialogue? what a constraint will it impose on the conduct of the fable? How can I attend to the natural chain of events, and proper succession of scenes, if I am engaged by the necessity of always bringing the two opposite characters together? How often will it happen that the contrast will require one scene, and the true course of the fable another?

Besides, if the two contrasted characters are both drawn with equal force, the intention of the drama will be rendered equivocal.

To conceive the whole force of this reasoning, open the Brothers of Terence. There you will see two brothers contrasted, both drawn with equal force; and you may challenge the most subtle critick to tell you which is the principal character, Micio or Demea? If he ventures to pronounce before the last scene, he will find to his astonishment, that He, whom he has taken, during five acts, for a man of sense, is a fool; and that He, whom he has taken for a fool, may be a very sensible man.

One would suppose at the beginning of the fifth act, that the Author, embarrassed by the contrast which he had established, was obliged to abandon his design, and to turn the interest of his piece topsy-turvy. But what is the consequence? That we no longer know which side to take; and after having been all along for Micio against Demea, we conclude without knowing, whether we are for one, or the other. One would almost desire a third father to preserve the golden mean between the two characters, and to point out the faults of each of them.

DIDEROT.

Here Demea returns to his own character, and the conduct of Terence is admirable in the lesson given to Micio. The opposite characters of these two brothers, and the inconveniencies resulting from each, perfectly point out to fathers the middle way which they ought to pursue in the education

of

Think you so pleasant and agreeable,
Is not from your deserts, or truth, or justice,
But your compliance, bounty, and indulgence.
---Now, therefore, if I'm odious to you, son,
Because I'm not subservient to your humour,
In all things, right, or wrong; away with care!
Spend, squander, and do what you will!---But if,
In those affairs where youth has made you blind,
Eager, and thoughtless, you will suffer me
To counsel and correct---and in due season
Indulge you---I am at your service.

Æsch. Father,

In all things we submit ourselves to you.
What's fit and proper, you know best.---But what Shall come of my poor brother?

Dem. * I consent

That he shall have her: let him finish there.

Æsch. † All now is as it shou'd be.---[to the audience.] Clap
your hands!

of their children, between the too great severity of the one, and the unlimited indulgence of the other.

DACIER.

* I consent that he shall have her.] This complaisance of Demea in allowing Ctesipho to retain the Musick-Girl, would be very criminal in a modern father; but the Greeks and Romans were not sufficiently enlightened to be sensible of the sin. DACIER.

† All now is as it shou'd be.] It has been said that l'Ecole des Maris [The School for Husbands] was a copy of the Brothers of Terence: if so, Moliere deserves more praise for having brought the taste of ancient Rome into France, than reproach for having stolen his piece. But the Brothers furnished nothing more than the bare idea of the Ecole des Maris. There are in the Brothers two old men of opposite humours, who give each of them a different education to the children that they educate; there are in like manner in the Ecole des Maris two guardians, of which one is severe, and the other indulgent; there lies the whole resemblance. There is scarce any intrigue in the Brothers; that of the Ecole des Maris is delicate, interesting, and comick. One of the women in Terence's piece, who ought to be the principal character, is never seen or heard except in her lying-in. The Isabella of Moliere is almost for ever on the stage full of grace and spirit, and sometimes mingles a decency, even in the tricks which she plays her guardian. There is no probability in the catastrophe of the Brothers: It is not in nature, that a morose, severe, covetous old fellow of sixty should become all at once gay, complaisant, and liberal. The catastrophe of the Ecole des Maris is the best of all the pieces of Moliere. It is probable, natural, grounded on the plot; and what is of full as much consequence, extremely comick. The stile of Terence is pure, sententious, but a little cold; as Cæsar, who excelled in all, has reproached him. The stile of Moliere in this piece is more chaste than in any of his others. The French Author almost equals the purity of the diction of Terence; and goes far beyond him in the intrigue, the characters, the catastrophe, and humour.

to

VOLTAIRE'S Contes de Guillaume Vadé.

It is impossible for any reader, who is come fresh from the perusal of the Brothers of Terence, and the Ecole des Maris of Moliere to acquiesce in the above decision, and I would venture to appeal from Monsr. Voltaire to any member of the French academy for a reversal of it. The reputation of Moliere has taken too deep root to be rendered more flourishing by blasting that of Terence; nor can such an attempt ever be made with a worse grace than when the imitation is blindly preferred to the original. Moliere, so far from having taken only the idea of his piece from the Brothers, has translated some passages almost literally, and the latter part of the second scene of the Ecole des

Maris is a very close imitation of one in the fourth act of the Brothers. In point of fable, I make no scruple to prefer the piece of Terence to that of Moliere. The intrigue of the four first acts of the Brothers is more artfully conducted than that of any other of Terence's pieces.

In the Andrian, was all the Episode of Charinus to be omitted, the play would be the better for it. In the Eunuch, as has been before observed, there is a lameness in the catastrophe, and the conclusion of Thraso's business in the last scene becomes episodical. In the Self-Tormentor the intrigue in a manner ends with the third act. In the Phormio, the loves of Antipho and Phædria have no further relation to each other, than that Phormio is used as an engine in both.* But in the play before us, the interest which Æschinus takes in Ctesipho's affairs, combines their several amours so naturally, that they reciprocally put each other in motion.

I cannot think the fable of the Ecole des Maris quite so happy. In Terence we see a good-humoured uncle adopting one of his nephews, while the other lad remains under the tuition of the severe father. This is natural enough; but in Moliere we have two young women left by their father's will as the intended wives of their antiquated guardians. Is there not some absurdity in such an idea? Micio and Demea are confessedly the archetypes of Ariste and Sganarelle; but in my mind infinitely superiour, and exhibited in a greater variety of situations: nor do the two sisters, Isabelle and Leonor, play into each others hands, like Æschinus and Ctesipho. In the Brothers, the business and the play open together; in Moliere the first scene is a mere conversation-piece. In Moliere, the plot is thin, seems to have been only calculated for the intrigue of a petite piece, and the circumstance of Isabelle's embracing Sganarelle and giving her hand to Erasme is purely farcical. In Terence the fable is more important, and the incidents naturally unfold themselves one after another; and the manner in which Demea gradually arrives at the knowledge of them is extremely artful and comick. What then is intrigue? If it be the Dramatick Narration of a story, so laid out as to produce pleasant situations, I will not scruple to pronounce, that there is more intrigue in the Brothers than in the Ecole des Maris. The reader has already seen several strictures on the fifth act, but the particular objection made by Monf. de Voltaire to the catastrophe is founded on a mistake: the complaisance, gaiety, and liberality of Demea being merely assumed; and his awkwardness in affecting those qualities full as comick as the admired catastrophe of the Ecole des Maris; which being produced in a forced manner by the disguise of Isabelle, and the broad cheat put upon Sganarelle before his face, is certainly deficient in the probability necessary to the incidents of legitimate comedy.—It is not without reluctance that I have been drawn into an examination of the comparative merits of these two excellent pieces: nor do I think there is in general a more invidious method of extolling one writer, than by depreciating the productions of another.

* The plot of the Step-Mother, so admired by the moderns for its simplicity, shall be examined in another place.

Baron, the author of the Andriens, has also written a comedy called l'Ecole des Pères, [the School for Fathers] built on this play of Terence. The piece opens with a very elegant, though pretty close version, of the first act of the Brothers; but on the whole I think this attempt less happy than his first. The bringing Clarice and Pamphile on the stage has no better effect, than his introduction of Glycerie in the Andrian. Telamon and Alcée are drawn with neither the strength nor delicacy of Micio and Demea; and the old man's change of character in the fifth act is neither rejected nor retained, but rather mangled and deformed. On the whole, it were to be wished, that Baron had adhered still more closely to Terence, or, like Moliere, deviated still further from him: for, as the play now stands, his attention to the Roman Poet seems to have thrown a constraint on his genius, and taken off the air of an original; while his alterations have rendered the Ecole des Pères but a lame imitation, and imperfect image of the Brothers of Terence.

In our own language, the Squire of Alfatia of Shadwell is also founded on this play: But the Muse of White Friars has but little right to the praises due to that of Athens and Rome. Shadwell's play, though drawn from so pure a source, is rather a farce of five acts than a comedy; nor has it the least comparative merit either in the plan or execution, except in the intention to give the character of Ctesiphon more at large than it is drawn in the original.

Step-Mother

T H E
S T E P-M O T H E R.

3 I

T H E S T E P-M O T H E R;

* Exhibited at the MEGALESIAN GAMES,

Sextus Julius Cæsar and Cn. Cornelius Dolabella, Curule Ædiles: It was not acted through: The Musick, composed for Equal Flutes, by Flaccus, Freedman to Claudius: It is entirely from the Greek of Apollodorus: † It was acted first without a Prologue, Cn. Octavius and T. Manlius, Consuls; and brought on again at the Funeral Games of Æmilius Paulus: It did not please: It was acted a third time, Q. Fulvius and L. Marcius, Curule Ædiles: Principal Actor, L. Ambivius Turpio: It pleas'd.

Year of Rome	-	-	588
Before Christ	-	-	165

* Exhibited at, &c.] The title to this play varies extremely in different editions. That given here is taken chiefly from Westerhovius.

† From the Greek of Apollodorus.] Criticks differ about the name of the Greek Poet from whom this play was taken. It is generally said to be Apollodorus; and most agree that this Comedy was not taken, like the four first of our author, from Menander.

T O

ISAAC SCHOMBERG, M.D.

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS INSCRIBED

BY HIS FAITHFUL FRIEND,

AND MOST OBLIGED

HUMBLE SERVANT,

GEORGE COLMAN.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE.

LACHES.

PHIDIPPUS.

PAMPHILUS.

PARMENO.

SOSIA.

BOY, and other Servants.

-OSTRATA.

MYRRHINA.

BACCHIS.

PHILOTIS.

SYRA.

NURSE, Servants to Bacchis, &c.

SCENE, ATHENS.

P R O L O G U E.

THIS play is call'd The Step-Mother. When first
It was presented, such a hurricane,*
A tumult so uncommon interven'd,
It neither could be seen, nor understood:
So taken were the people, so engag'd
By a rope-dancer!---It is now brought on
As a new piece: and he who wrote the play,
Suffer'd it not to be repeated then,
That he might profit by a second sale. †
‡ Others, his plays, you have already known;
Now then, let me beseech you, know this too.

* Hurricane.] Calamitas. This word is used in the same sense in the first scene of the Eunuch.—Nothing can be more evident than that this was the prologue to the second attempt to exhibit this comedy.

† That he might profit by a second sale.] See the last note to the second prologue.

‡ Others, his plays, you have already known.] According to Vossius, the Step-Mother was not attempted to be revived till after the representation of the Brothers. If so, they had already seen all the rest of Terence's pieces. DACIER.

A N O T H E R

ANOTHER PROLOGUE.*

I Come a pleader, † in the shape of prologue :
 Let me then gain my cause, and now grown old
 Experience the same favour as when young ;
 Who then recover'd many a lost play,
 Breath'd a new life into the scenes, and sav'd
 The author, and his writings from oblivion.
 Of those, which first I studied of Cæcilius, ‡

* Another Prologue.] These two prologues are by some blended together, but most learned and judicious editors make two of them. Faernus says that in some copies the name of L. Ambivius is over them, in great letters; thus, L. AMBIVIUS PROLOGUS: and the same distinction is made in the Basilican copy. Eugraphius says positively that the prologue was spoken by Ambivius Turpio. COOKE.

† I come a pleader, &c.] Orator ad vos venio. Madam Dacier, and some who follow her, translate Orator by the word Ambassador. Her explanation of the original (though in this instance, as well as many others, she does not acknowledge it) is taken from Donatus. But what is very extraordinary, Donatus, in his comment on the very next line, gives the word a quite different signification; and tells us that Orator signifies a person entrusted with the defence of a cause; in one word, a Pleaver: and that Exorator signifies him who has gained the cause. The word is undoubtedly used in this latter sense in the Prologue to the Self-Tormentor—Oratorem voluit esse me, non Prologum—and it seems to be the best and easiest construction in this place also.

‡ Cæcilius.] A famous comick Poet among the Romans. His chief excellencies are said to have been the gravity of his stile, and the choice of his subjects. The first quality was attributed to him by Horace, Tully, &c. and the last by Varro. In argumentis Cæcilius poscit palmam, in æthesi Terentius.---“ In “ the choice of subjects Cæcilius demands “ the preference, in the manners Terence.” —Madam Dacier indeed renders in argumentis “ in the disposition of his subjects.” But the words will not bear that construction. Argumentum, I believe, is uniformly used for the argument itself, never implies the conduct of it—as in the Prologue to the Andrian, non tam dissimili argumento—“ in “ argument less different.”—Besides, the disposition of the subject was the very art attributed by the critics of those days to Terence, and which Horace mentions in the very same line with the gravity of Cæcilius, distinguishing them as the several characteristics of each writer.

Vincere Cæcilius gravitate, Terentius arte.

See Hurd's notes to the Epistle to Augustus.

ANOTHER PROLOGUE.

In some I was excluded; and in some Hardly maintain'd my ground. But knowing well
The variable fortunes of the Scene,
I was content to hazard certain toil
For an uncertain gain. I undertook
To rescue those same plays from condemnation,
And labour'd to reverse your sentence on them;
That the same Poet might afford me more,
And no ill fortune damp young Genius in him.
My cares prevail'd; the plays were heard; and thus
Did I restore an Author, nearly lost
Through the malevolence of adversaries,
To study, labour, and the Poet's art.
But had I at that time despis'd his plays,
Or labour'd to deter him from the task,
It had been easy to have kept him idle,
And to have scar'd him from attempting more:
For my sake, therefore, deign to hear with candour
The fruit I mean to offer to you now.

Once more I bring THE STEP-MOTHER before you,
Which yet in silence I might never play;
So did confusion crush it: which confusion
Your prudence may allay, if it will deign
To second our endeavours.---When I first

ANOTHER PROLOGUE.

Begun to play this piece, the sturdy Boxers,
(The Dancers on the Rope expected too)
Th' increasing crouds, the noise, and women's clamour
Oblig'd me to retire before my time.

I, upon this occasion, had recourse
To my old way. I brought it on again.
In the first act I please: meanwhile there spreads
A rumour of the Gladiators: then
The people flock together, riot, roar,
And fight for places. I meanwhile my place
Could not maintain ---To-day there's no disturbance;
All's silence and attention; a clear stage:

* 'Tis your's to give these games their proper grace.

Let not, oh let not the Dramatick Art
Fall to a few! Let your authority Assist and second mine! If I for gain
Ne'er over-rated my abilities,
If I have made it still my only care
To be obedient to your will, oh grant
That he who hath committed his performance
To my defence, and who hath thrown himself

* 'Tis your's to give these games their proper grace.] There is great force and eloquence in the actor's affecting a concern for the sacred festivals, which were in danger of being deprived of their chief ornaments, if by too great a severity they discouraged the Poets, who undertook to furnish the plays during the celebrity. DACIER.

A N O T H E R P R O L O G U E .

On your protection, be not giv'n to scorn,
And foul derision of his envious foes !

Admit this plea for my sake, and be silent ;
That other Poets may not fear to write,
That I too may hereafter find it meet
To play new pieces, * bought at my expence.

* Bought at my expence.] Pretio emtas meo. These words I have rendered literally, tho' there is great dispute among commentators concerning them. Donatus, and, after him, Madam Dacier, explains pretio by æstimatione pretii, importing that Ambivius valued the play, when the Ædiles were to purchase it. Madam Dacier therefore supposes the case to be thus. When the Ædiles had a mind to purchase a copy for the Stage, they gave it to the Master of the Company, to peruse, and set a price upon it. If it failed, the master was bound to return the money to the Magistrates ; which made it the interest of the Actors to support the piece, as the loss, if it was rejected, fell upon themselves.—This it must be owned is ingenious, but has nothing to support it but conjecture. We are entirely unacquainted with the nature of these transactions between the Ædiles, Players, and Poet, and therefore cannot pronounce with certainty about them. Besides, I believe it will be hard to find an instance where Pretium is put for Æstimatio Pretii. I am therefore more inclined to think, that on some occasions the Ædiles, on others the Master of the Company bought the play, of which last kind was the purchase of the Step-Mother. But how in either case, if it was not received by the publick, the Poet could claim a right to a second sale, as is mentioned in the first prologue, is a matter not easily determined at this distance of time.

PATRICK.

Madam Dacier's reasoning on this dark point of theatrical history is certainly inconclusive ; not only for want of proof, but because no method of settling the assize of plays could be more unworthy the Magistrate, more detrimental to Authors, or more hurtful to the credit of the Stage : for if the Actor was to abide by the loss, his interest would incline him to set the very lowest value on the piece. —Taking the whole prologue together, may not one conjecture, that the first time a play was exhibited it was purchased, as is mentioned in other prologues, by the Ædiles : but if it failed, or, for the sake of Gladiators and Rope-dancers, was then refused a hearing, the Poet had a right to withdraw his piece without returning the copy-money ; and if it was brought on again by the manager, it was at his own hazard and expence ? This conjecture explains the passage in the first prologue concerning a second sale, and gives an additional force to every thing urged by Ambivius in the second ; in which, supposing the actor to be speaking to the audience concerning a theatrical usage with which they were all familiarly acquainted, the whole obscurity of both the prologues vanishes. We immediately comprehend the manner of his revival of the plays of Cæcilius, and see how essentially his interest is concerned in the reception of this of Terence. It gives us also a very high opinion of the penetration and humanity of Ambivius.

ANOTHER PROLOGUE.

From these two prologues, and some passages in Horace, we may collect that riots, parties, &c. were as common in Rome as in England; and that a first night was as terrible, and the town as formidable to Cæcilius, and Terence, as to the puny authors of our days. The high reputation of Ambivius Turpio, (the actor who spoke this Prologue, and probably the Manager of the Company) as well as the esteem which Terence had for him, is evident; and we conceive no unfavourable idea of the town-criticks of those times, who could listen to such a plea urged by the Actor, and so candidly acquiesce in all that he said in his own commendation. We have seen indeed, and it is to be hoped shall see again, an acting manager in our time, to whom modern authors have as much reason to be partial, as Terence to Ambivius: but though he has helped out many a lame play with a lively prologue, I believe he would hardly venture to make such an address to the publick as this now before us.

T H E

T H E
S T E P - M O T H E R.

A C T I. S C E N E I.

P H I L O T I S, S Y R A.

Phi. NOW, by my troth, a woman of the town
Scarce ever finds a faithful lover, Syra.

This very Pamphilus, how many times
He swore to Bacchis, swore so solemnly
One could not but believe him, that he never Would, in her life-time, marry! See, he's married.

Syra. I warn you therefore, and most earnestly
Conjure you, to have pity upon none.
But plunder, fleece, and beggar ev'ry man
That falls into your pow'r.

Phi. What! spare none?

Syra. None.
For know, there is not one of all your sparks
But studies to cajole you with fine speeches,
And have his will as cheaply as he can.
Shou'd not You then endeavour to fool Them?

Phi. But to treat all alike is wrong.

Syra. What ! wrong ?
 To be reveng'd upon your enemies ?
 Or to snare those who spread their snares for you ?
 ---Alas ! why have not I your youth and beauty,
 Or you my sentiments ?

S C E N E I I.

Enter P A R M E N O.

Par. to Scirtus within.] If our old gentleman
 Asks for me, tell him I'm this very moment
 Gone to the Port to seek for Pamphilus.
 D'ye understand my meaning, Scirtus ? If he asks,
 Tell him that ; if he shou'd not ask, say nothing ;
 That this excuse may serve another time. [comes forward.
 ---But is not that Philotis ? Whence comes She ?
 Philotis, save you !

Phi. Save you, Parmeno !

Syra. Save you, good Parmeno !

Par. And save you, Syra !

---Tell me, Philotis, where have you been gadding,
 Taking your pleasure this long time ?

Phi. I've taken

No pleasure, Parmeno, indeed. I went

With

With a most brutal Captain hence to Corinth.
There have I led a wretched life with him,
For two whole years.

Par. Ay, ay, I warrant you
That you have often wish'd to be in Athens;
Often repented of your journey.

Phi. Oh,
'Tis quite impossible to tell how much
I long'd to be at home, how much I long'd
To leave the Captain, see you, revel with you,
After the good old fashion, free, and easy.
For there I durst not speak a single word,
But what, and when the mighty Captain pleas'd.

Par. 'Twas cruel in him thus to tie your tongue:
At least, I'll warrant, that you thought it so.

Phi. But what's this business, Parmeno? this story
That Bacchis has been telling me within?
I could not have believ'd that Pamphilus
Would in her life-time marry.

Par. Marry truly!

Phi. Why he is married: is not he?

Par. He is.

But I'm afraid 'twill prove a crazy match,
And will not hold together long.

Phi.

Phi. Heav'n grant it,
So it turn out to Bacchis's advantage!
But how can I believe this, Parmeno?
Tell me.

Par. It is not fit it should be told.
Enquire no more.

Phi. For fear I should divulge it?
Now heav'n so prosper me, as I enquire,
Not for the sake of telling it again,
But to rejoice within myself.

Par. All these Fair words, Philotis, sha'n't prevail on me
To trust my back to your discretion.

Phi. Well;
Don't tell me, Parmeno.---As if you had not Much rather tell this secret, than I hear it!

Par. She's in the right: I am a blab, 'tis true.
It is my greatest failing.---Give your word,
You'll not reveal it, and I'll tell you.

Phi. Now
You're like yourself again. I give my word.
Speak.

Par. Listen then.

Phi. I'm all ear.

Par.

Par. Pamphilus

Doated on Bacchis still as much as ever,
When the old gentleman began to teaze him
To marry, in the common cant of fathers ;
---“ That he was now grown old ; and Pamphilus
“ His only child ; and that he long’d for heirs,
“ As props of his old age.” At first my master
Withstood his instances, but as his father
Became more hot and urgent, Pamphilus
Began to waver in his mind, and felt
A conflict betwixt love and duty in him.
At length, by hammering on marriage still,
And daily instances, th’ old man prevail’d,
And made a match with our next neighbour’s daughter.
Pamphilus did not take it much to heart,
Till just upon the very brink of wedlock :
But when he saw the nuptial rites prepar’d,
And, without respite, he must marry ; then
It came so home to him, that even Bacchis,
Had she been present, must have pitied him.
Whenever he could steal from company,
And talk to me alone,---“ Oh Parmeno,
“ What have I done ?” he’d cry,---“ I’m lost for ever.
“ Into what ruin have I plung’d myself !

“ I cannot bear it, Parmeno. Ah wretch !

“ I am undone.”

Phi. Now all the pow'rs of heav'n
Confound you, Laches, for thus teasing him !

Par. In short, he marries, and brings home his wife.
The first night he ne'er touch'd her ; nor the next.

Phi. How ! he a youth, and she a maidenhead !
Tipsy, and never touch her ! 'Tis not likely ;
Nor do I think it can be true.

Par. No wonder.
For they, that come to you, come all desire :
But he was bound to her against his will.

Phi. What follow'd upon this ?

Par. A few days after,
Pamphilus, taking me aside, informs me,
“ That the maid still remain'd a maid for him ;
“ That he had hop'd, before he brought her home,
“ He might have borne the marriage :---but resolving “ Within myself, not to retain her long,
“ I held it neither honesty in Me,
“ Nor of advantage to the maid herself,
“ That I should throw her off to scorn :---but rather “ Return to her friends, as I receiv'd her,
“ Chaste and inviolate.”

Phi. A worthy youth,
And of great modesty !

Par. “ To make this publick
“ Would not, I think, do well : and to return her “ Upon her father’s hands, no crime alledg’d,
“ Is arrogant : but she, I hope, as soon
“ As she perceives she cannot live with me,
“ Will of her own accord depart.”

Phi. But tell me ;
Went he meanwhile to Bacchis ?

Par. Every day.
But she, as is the way you know, perceiving
He was another’s property, became
More cross and mercenary.

Phi. Troth, no wonder.

Par. Ay, but ’twas that detach’d him chiefly from her.
For when he had examin’d well himself,
Bacchis, and her at home ; and had compar’d
Their different manners ; seeing that his Bride,
After the fashion of a liberal mind,
Was decent, modest, patient of affronts,
And anxious to conceal the wrongs he did her ;
Touch’d partly with compassion for his wife,
And partly tir’d with t’other’s insolence,

He by degrees withdrew his heart from Bacchis,
 Transferring it to her, whose disposition
 Was so congenial to his own. Meanwhile
 An old relation of the family
 Dies in the isle of Imbrus.* His estate
 Comes by the law to Them; and our old man
 Dispatching thither, much against his will,
 The now-fond Pamphilus, he leaves his wife
 Here with his mother. The old gentleman
 Retir'd into the country, † and but seldom
 Comes up to town.

Phi. But what is there in this
 That can affect the marriage?

Par. You shall hear
 Immediately. At first, for some few days,
 The women seem'd to live on friendly terms.
 Till all at once the Bride, forsooth, conceiv'd
 A wonderful disgust to Sostrata: ‡
 And yet there was no open breach between them,

* Imbrus.] An island near Thrace.

† Retir'd into the country.] This is very well conducted: for supposing the old gentleman to have remained in town, the whole perplexity and intricacy of the fable would be prevented. DONATUS.

‡ The bride conceiv'd a disgust to Sostrata.] The explanation of things is very artfully reserved to its proper place; for, in truth, Parmeno is deceived, and Philumena did not withdraw herself from any real disgust to her step-mother, but pretends a pique through shame. DONATUS.

And no complaints on either side.

Phi. What then?

Par. If Sostrata, for conversation-sake,
Went to the Bride, she instantly withdrew,
Shunning her company. At length, not able
To bear it any longer, she pretends
Her mother had sent for her to assist
At some home-sacrifice. Away she went.
After a few days absence, Sostrata
Sent for her back. They made some lame excuse,
I know not what. She sends again. No lady.
Then after several messages, at last
They say the gentlewoman's sick. My mistress
Goes on a visit to her: not let in.
Th' old gentleman, inform'd of all this, came
On this occasion yesterday to town;
And waited on the father of the Bride.
What past between them, I as yet can't tell;
And yet I long to know the end of this.
---There's the whole business. Now I'll on my way.

Phi. And I: for there's a stranger here, with whom
I have an assignation.*

Par.

* There's a stranger here, &c.] Here Philotis assigns a reason for her never appearing in the rest of the play. DONATUS.

It were to be wished, for the sake of the credit of our author's acknowledged art in the Drama, that Philotis had assigned as good a reason

Par. Speed the plough!

Phi. Parmeno, fare you well!

Par. Farewell, Philotis! [Exeunt severally.] reason for her appearing at all. Eugraphius justly says, Ea igitur meretrix, quæ hic est, longe a fabulâ est constituta.—"The courtizan in this scene is a character quite "foreign to the fable." Donatus also says much the same thing in his preface, and in his first note on this comedy; but adds, "that Terence chose this method, "rather than to relate the argument by "means of a Prologue, or to introduce a "God speaking from a machine." I will venture to say that the Poet might have taken a much shorter and easier method than either; I mean, to have begun the play with the very scene, which now opens the second Act. Parmeno's narration must be allowed to be beautiful; but to introduce two characters entirely foreign to the play, merely to hear this story, is almost as inartificial, as relating it directly to the audience: but what is still worse, when the tale is all told, the information we receive from it is idle and impertinent, and only serves to forestal incidents, and throw a coldness on the succeeding scenes; for there is not a single circumstance in Parmeno's narration but what unfolds itself in the course of the play; and whoever begins this Comedy at the second act, will take in the whole story as completely, as by beginning at the first.—I may venture therefore to pronounce this act to be redundant, and to assign it as one of the causes of the general complaint of the want of vivacity in the fable of this comedy. A whole act consumed in narration is not artificial; but when that narration is useless and superfluous, it becomes still more excusable.

A C T

ACT II. SCENE I.

LACHES, SOSRATA.*

Lach. OH heav'n and earth, what animals are women !
 What a conspiracy between them all,
 To do or not do, love or hate alike !
 Not one but has the sex so strong in her,
 She differs nothing from the rest. Step-mothers
 All hate their step-daughters : and every wife
 Studies alike to contradict her husband,
 The same perverseness running through them all.
 Each seems train'd up in the same school of mischief :
 And of that school, if any such there be,
 My wife, I think is school-mistress.

* Laches, Sostrata.] Donatus remarks that this scene opens the intention of Terence to oppose the generally-received opinion, and to draw the character of a good Step-Mother. It would therefore, as has been already observed, have been a very proper scene to begin the play, as it carries us immediately into the midst of things; and we cannot fail to be interested where we see the persons acting so deeply interested themselves. We gather from it just so much of the story, as is necessary for our information at first setting out: We are told of the abrupt departure of Philumena, and are witnesses of the confusion in the two families of Laches and Phidippus. The absence of Laches, which had been in great measure the occasion of this misunderstanding, is also very artfully mentioned in the altercation between him and Sostrata.—The character of Laches is very naturally drawn. He has a good heart, and a testy disposition; and the poor old gentleman is kept in such constant perplexity, that he has perpetual occasion to exert both those qualities.

Sostra.

Soфра. Ah me!

Who know not why I am accus'd.

Lach. Not know?

Soфра. No, as I hope for mercy! as I hope
We may live long together!

Lach. Heav'n forbid!

Soфра. Hereafter, Laches, you'll be sensible
How wrongfully you have accus'd me.

Lach. I?—

Accuse you wrongfully?---Is't possible
To speak too hardly of your late behaviour?
Disgracing me, yourself, and family;
Laying up sorrow for your absent son;
Converting into foes his new-made friends,
Who thought him worthy of their child in marriage.
You've been our bane, and by your shrewishness
Brew'd this disturbance.

Soфра. I?

Lach. You, woman, you:
Who take me for a stone, and not a man.
Think ye, because I'm mostly in the country,
I'm ignorant of your proceedings here?
No, no; I know much better what's done here,
Than where I'm chiefly resident. Because

Upon my family at home, depends
My character abroad. I knew long since Philumena's disgust to you;—no wonder!
Nay, 'twere a wonder, had it not been so.
Yet I imagin'd not her hate so strong,
'Twould vent itself upon the family:
Which had I dream'd of, she should have remain'd,
And you pack'd off.---Consider, Softrata,
How little cause you had to vex me thus.
In complaisance to you, and husbanding
My fortune, I retir'd into the country;
Scraping, and labouring beyond the bounds
Of reason, or my age, that my estate
Might furnish means for your expence and pleasure.
---Was it not then your duty in return
To see that nothing happen'd here to vex me?

Softra. 'Twas not my doing, nor my fault indeed.

Lach. 'Twas your fault, Softrata; your fault alone.
You was sole mistress here; and in your care
The house, tho' I had freed you of all other cares.
A woman, an old woman too, and quarrel
With a green girl! oh shame upon't!---You'll say
That 'twas her fault.

Softra. Not I indeed, my Laches.

Lach. Fore heav'n, I'm glad on't! on my fon's account.
For as for You, I'm well enough affur'd,
No fault can make you worfe.

Soфра. But prithee, husband,
How can you tell that her averfion to me
Is not a mere pretence, that ſhe may ſtay
The longer with her mother?

Lach. No fuch thing.
Was not your viſit yeſterday a proof,
From their denial to admit you to her?

Soфра. They ſaid ſhe was ſo ſick ſhe could not ſee me.

Lach. Sick of your humours; nothing elſe, I fancy.
And well ſhe might: for there's not one of you
But want your ſons to take a wife: and that's
No ſooner over, but the very woman,
Which by your inſtigation they have married,
They, by your inſtigation, put away.

S C E N E II.

Enter P H I D I P P U S.

Phid. to Phil. within.] Although, Philumena, I know my pow'r

To force you to comply with my commands,
Yet yielding to paternal tendernefs,
I e'en give way, nor crofs your humour.

Lach. See,

Phidippus in good time! I'll learn from him
The caufe of this.---[going up to him.] Phidippus, * tho' I
Myfelf indulgent to my family, [own
Yet my complacency and eafinefs
Runs not to that extreme, that my good-nature
Corrupts their morals. Would you act like me,
'Twould be of fervice to both families.
But you I fee are wholly in their pow'r.

Phid. See there! †

Lach. I waited on you yesterday

* Phidippus, tho' I own, &c.] This expoftulation of Laches with Phidippus is a moft faithful and elegant copy of nature. His peace of mind being difturbed by the difor-ders he finds in his family, his ill-humour, like that of moft married men, breaks out firft upon his wife. But as family-scenes, whether fweet or bitter, are feldom agreeable to a third perfon, the prefence of Phidippus immediately puts an end to their dialogue. But the circumftance which I moft admire is, that although Laches had juft before thrown the whole blame on Softrata, he no fooner fees Phidippus than he endeavours to exculpate his own family, and to infinuate that the whole fault lies on that of his neighbour.

* See there!] Heia vero! Thefe words, feemingly fo eafy, have yet puzzled Commentators. Donatus makes them an adverb of interruption. Madam Dacier interprets them as addreffed by Phidippus to his daughter, in reference to their converfation within, fignifying, “ Did not I tell you they would “ be offended at your abfence?” For my part I take it to be an emotion of furprize mixed with difcontent. Phidippus, while he is yet difcourfing with his daughter, is fuddenly accoffed by Laches, and in language too, that he did not much like. Upon which he exclaims, Heia vero! which words
feem to anfwer pretty nearly to our phrafe,
Look ye there now! a phrafe often ufed on the like occafions. PATRICK.

About your daughter: but I went away,
 No wifer than I came. It is not right,
 If you would have the alliance laft between us,
 To smother your repentment. If We feem
 In fault, declare it; that we may refute,
 Or make amends for our offence: and you
 Shall carve the fatisfaction out yourfelf.
 But if her ficknefs only is the caufe
 Of her remaining in your family,
 Truft me, Phidippus, but you do me wrong,
 To doubt her due attendance at my houfe.
 For, by the pow'rs of heav'n, I'll not allow
 That you, altho' her father, with her better
 Than I. I love her on my fon's account;
 To whom, I'm well convinc'd, ſhe is as dear
 As he is to himfelf: and I can tell *
 How deeply 'twill affect him, if he knows this.
 Wherefore I wifh ſhe ſhould come home again,
 Before my fon's return.

Phid. My good friend Laches,
 I know your care, and your benevolence;
 Nor doubt but all is as you fay; and hope

* I can tell how deeply, &c.] Here the Poet very artfully prepares a reaſon to be affigned

by Pamphilus for his pretended diſcontent at the departure of his wife. DONATUS.

Lach. What prevents it?

Phid. Not in the least. For when I urg'd it home,
And threaten'd to oblige her to return,
She vow'd most solemnly, she could not bear
Your house, so long as Pamphilus was absent.
---All have their failings: I am of so soft
A nature, I can't thwart my family.

Softly. Wretch that I am ! Ah me ! [aside.

Phid. At present,

Lach. I'll go with you. [Exeunt.]

She declares her innocence; yet appearances are all against her. Supposing this to be the first act of the play, it would be impossible for a Comedy to open in a more interesting manner.

S C E N E III.

Manet S O S T R A T A.Softra. How unjustly

Do husbands stretch their censures to all wives
For the offences of a few, whose vices
Reflect dishonour on the rest!---For, heaven
So help me, as I'm wholly innocent
Of what my husband now accuses me!
But 'tis no easy task to clear myself;
So fix'd and rooted is the notion in them,
That Step-Mothers are all severe.---Not I;
For I have ever lov'd Philumena,
As my own daughter; nor can I conceive
What accident has drawn her hatred on me.
My son's return, I hope, will fettle all;
And, ah, I've too much cause to wish his coming.

[Exit.]

A C T

ACT III. SCENE I.

Enter PAMPHILUS and PARMENO.

Pam. NEVER did man experience greater ills,
More miseries in love than I.---Distraction!
Was it for This I held my life so dear?
For This was I so anxious to return?
Better, much better were it to have liv'd
In any place, than come to this again!
To feel, and know myself a wretch!---For when Misfortune befalls us, all the interval
Between its happening, and our knowledge of it,
May be esteem'd clear gain.

Par. But as it is,
You'll sooner be deliver'd from your troubles.
For had you not return'd, the breach between them
Had been made wider. But now, Pamphilus,
Both will, I doubt not, reverence your presence.
You'll know the whole, make up their difference,
And reconcile them to each other.—These
Are all mere trifles, which you think so grievous.

Pam.

Pam. Ah, why will you attempt to comfort me?
 Was ever such a wretch?---Before I married,
 My heart, you know, was wedded to another.
 ---But I'll not dwell upon that misery,
 Which may be easily conceiv'd: and yet
 I had not courage to refuse the match
 My father forc'd upon me.---Scarcely wean'd
 From my old love, my lim'd soul scarcely freed
 From Bacchis, and devoted to my wife,
 Than, lo, a new calamity arises,
 Threatening to tear me from Philumena.
 For either I shall find my mother faulty,
 Or else my wife: In either case unhappy.
 For duty, Parmeno, obliges me
 To bear with all the failings of a mother:
 And then I am so bounden to my wife,
 Who, calm as patience, bore the wrongs I did her,
 Nor ever murmur'd a complaint.---But sure
 'Twas somewhat very serious, Parmeno,
 That could occasion such a lasting quarrel.

Par. Rather some trifle, if you knew the truth.
 The greatest quarrels do not always rise
 From deepest injuries. We often see,
 That what wou'd never move another's spleen,

Renders the cholerick your worst of foes.
Observe how lightly children squabble.---Why?
Because they're govern'd by a feeble mind.
Women, like children, too are impotent,
And weak of soul. A single word, perhaps,
Has kindled all this enmity between them.

Pam. * Go, Parmeno, and let them know I'm come.

[noise within.]

Par. Ha! what's all this?

Pam. Hush!

Par. I perceive a bustle,
And running to and fro.---Come this way, Sir!
---To the door!---nearer still!---There, there, d'ye hear?

[noise continues.]

Pam. Peace; hush! [shriek within] Oh Jupiter, I heard a shriek!

Par. You talk yourself, and bid me hold my tongue.

Myrrhina, within.] Hush, my dear child, for heaven's sake!

Pam. It seem'd

The voice of my wife's mother. I am ruin'd!

Par. How so?

* Go, Parmeno, and let them know I'm come.
It was the custom of those times, for the husband returning from abroad to send a messenger before, to give his wife notice of his arrival. DACIER.

Pam. Undone !

Par. And why ?

Pam. Ah, Parmeno,
They hide some terrible misfortune from me !

Par. They said, your wife Philumena was ill :
Whether 'tis that, I cannot tell.

Pam. Death, firrah !

Why did you not inform me that before ?

Par. Because I could not tell you all at once.

Pam. What's her disorder ?

Par. I don't know.

Pam. But tell me.

Has she had no physician ?

Par. I don't know.

Pam. But why do I delay to enter strait,
That I may learn the truth, be what it will ?
---Oh my Philumena, in what condition
Shall I now find thee ?---If there's danger of thee,
My life's in danger too. [Exit.

S C E N E

S C E N E II.

P A R M E N O alone.

It were not good
 That I should follow him into the house:
 For all our family are odious to them.*
 That's plain from their denying Softrata
 Admittance yesterday.---And if by chance
 Her illness should increase, (which heav'n forbid,
 For my poor master's sake!) they'll cry directly,
 "Softrata's servant came into the house:"
 Swear,---"that I brought the plague along with me,
 "Put all their lives in danger, and increas'd
 "Philumena's distemper."---By which means,
 My mistress will be blam'd, and I be beaten.

S C E N E III.

Enter S O S T R A T A.

Softra. Alas, I hear a dreadful noise within.
 Philumena, I fear, grows worse and worse:

* For all our family are odious to them.] prevent not only Parmeno, but Softrata also
 The Poet very artfully devises a reason to from entering the house. DONATUS.

Which Æsculapius, and thou, Health, forbid! *

But now I'll visit her. [goes towards the house.

Par. Ho, Sofrata!

Sofra. Who's there?

Par. You'll be shut out a second time.

Sofra. Ha, Parmeno, are you there?---Wretched woman!
What shall I do?---Not visit my son's wife,
When she lies sick at next door?

Par. Do not go;
No, nor send any body else; for they,
That love the folks, to whom themselves are odious,
I think are guilty of a double folly:
Their labour proves but idle to themselves,
And troublesome to those for whom 'tis meant.
Besides, your son, the moment he arriv'd,
Went in to visit her.

Sofra. How, Parmeno!
Is Pamphilus arriv'd?

Par. He is.

* Which Æsculapius, and thou, Health, &c.] She invokes the Goddess of Health together with Æsculapius, because in Greece their statues were always placed near each other, so that to offer up prayers to the one and not to the other, would have been held the highest indignity to the power neglected.—

Lucian in his Hippias says, και εικονες εν αυτω λιθι λευκη της αρχαιας εργασιας, η μιν Υγεια, ηδε Ασκληπιου. It contains two white marble statues of very ancient workmanship, the one of the Goddess of Health, the other of Æsculapius.

DACIER.

Sofra.

Soфра. Thank heav'n!

Oh, how my comfort is reviv'd by that!

Par. And therefore I ne'er went into the house.
For if Philumena's complaints abate,
She'll tell him, face to face, the whole affair,
And what has past between you to create
This difference.---But here he comes---how sad!

S C E N E I V .

Enter P A M P H I L U S .

Soфра. My dear boy, Pamphilus!

Pam. My mother, save you! [disordered.]

Soфра. I'm glad to see you safe return'd.---How does
Your wife?

Pam. A little better.

Soфра. Grant it, heav'n!
---But why d'ye weep, and why are you so sad?

Pam. Nothing, good mother.

Soфра. What was all that bustle?
Tell me, did pain attack her suddenly?

Pam. It did.

Soфра. And what is her complaint?

Pam.

Pam. A fever.

Soфра. What! a quotidian?

Pam. So they say.---But in,*

Good mother, and I'll follow.

Soфра. Be it so. [Exit.

Pam. Do you run, Parmeno, to meet the servants,
And give your help in bringing home the baggage.

Par. As if they did not know the road!

Pam. Away! [Exit Parmeno.

S C E N E V.

P A M P H I L U S alone.

Which way shall I begin the wretched tale
Of my misfortunes, which have fall'n upon me
Thus unexpectedly? which even now

* But in, good mother.] The behaviour of Pamphilus in this scene is most faithfully copied from nature. Being shocked with the discovery he has made, he leaves the house in great anguish, which, though he wishes to dissemble, he is unable to conceal. He cannot receive his mother as he ought, or give an answer of above two words: and finding himself unfit for conversation or company, he finds means to remove Soфра and Parmeno as soon as possible. When any unexpected grief takes hold of us, witnesses lay a constraint on our behaviour, and we are apt to wish to be alone in order to deliver ourselves up entirely to the natural emotions of the mind. There is a very superior instance of the like beauty in Othello, in the scene where the Moor is worked up to jealousy by Iago. He first testifies his uneasiness by half-words and short speeches; but soon finding it impossible to smother his disorder much longer, he orders Iago to leave him; upon which he immediately bursts into an agony of passion.

These

These very eyes have seen, these ears have heard?
And which, discover'd, drove me out o'doors,
Cover'd with deep confusion?---For but now
As I rush'd in, all anxious for my wife,
And thinking to have found her visited,
Alas, with a far different complaint;
Soon as her women saw me, at first sight
Struck and o'erjoy'd, they all exclaim'd, "He's come!"
And then as soon each countenance was chang'd,
That chance had brought me so unseasonably.
Meanwhile one of them ran before, to speak
Of my arrival. I, who long'd to see her,
Directly follow'd; and no sooner enter'd,
Than her disorder was, alas, too plain:
For neither had they leisure to disguise it,
Nor could she silence the loud cries of travail.
Soon as I saw it, "Oh shame, shame!" I cried,
And rush'd away in tears and agony,
O'erwhelm'd with horror at a stroke so grievous.
The mother follows me, and at the threshold
Falls on her knees before me all in tears.
This touch'd me to the soul. And certainly
'Tis in the very nature of our minds,
To rise and fall according to our fortunes.

Thus she address'd me.---“ Oh, my Pamphilus,
 “ The cause of her removal from your house,
 “ You’ve now discover’d. To my virgin-daughter
 “ Some unknown villain offer’d violence;
 “ And she fled hither to conceal her labour
 “ From you, and from your family.”——Alas!
 When I but call her earnest prayers to mind,
 I cannot chuse but weep.---“ Whatever chance,”
 Continued she, “ whatever accident,
 “ Brought you to-day thus suddenly upon us,
 “ By that we both conjure you---if in justice,
 “ And equity we may---to keep in silence,
 “ And cover her distress.---Oh, Pamphilus,
 “ If e’er you witness’d her affection for you,
 “ By that affection she implores you now,
 “ Not to refuse us!---for recalling her,
 “ Do as your own discretion shall direct.
 “ That she’s in labour now, or has conceiv’d
 “ By any other person, is a secret
 “ Known but to you alone. For I’ve been told,
 “ The two first months you had no commerce with her.
 “ * And it is now the seventh since your union.

“ Your

* And it is now the seventh since your union.
 There are many doubts concerning the interpretation of this line in the original—Tum postquam ad te venit, mensis agitur hic jam septimus—

" Your sentiments on this are evident.
 " But now, my Pamphilus, if possible,
 " I'll call it a miscarriage: no one else
 " But will believe, as probable, 'tis your's.
 " The child shall be immediately expos'd.
 " No inconvenience will arise to You;
 " While thus you shall conceal the injury,
 " * That my poor girl unworthily sustain'd."
 ---I promis'd her; and I will keep my word.
 But to recall her, wou'd be poor indeed:
 Nor will I do it, tho' I love her still,

Septimus—Not being able to adjust this dispute, I have rendered the line by a translation equally equivocal. Some imagine that it means the seventh month from their marriage; and others explain it to be the seventh month from the time that Pamphilus had knowledge of his wife. The words Postquam ad te venit seem to countenance the former interpretation, but what Phidippus says in the next act rather favours the latter.

It is necessary to the understanding the fable of this Comedy, that the English Reader should know that the Græcians had a power of putting away their wives on refunding the portion.

There are several circumstances in the plot of this play rather irreconcilable to modern ideas of delicacy; but as they have in them no moral turpitude, they gave no offence to the Antients. There are no less than three of the six plays of Terence, in which we have a lady in the straw, and in two we absolutely hear her cry out. The Moderns on the contrary have chosen, as subjects of ridicule, things which the Antients would have considered with horror. Adultery has been looked upon by Wycherly, Congreve, and Vanburgh, as a very good joke, and an inexhaustible fund of humour and pleasantry; and "our English Writers," as Addison observes, "are as frequently severe upon that innocent unhappy creature, commonly known by the name of a Cuckold, as the Ancient Comick Writers were upon an Eating Parasite, or a Vain-Glorious Soldier."

* That my poor girl unworthily sustain'd.]
It is rather extraordinary that Myrrhina's account of the injury done to her daughter should not put Pamphilus in mind of his own adventure, which comes out in the fifth act. It is certain that had the Poet let the Audience into that secret in this place, they would have immediately concluded that the wife of Pamphilus, and the lady whom he had ravished, were one and the same person.

And former commerce binds me strongly to her.
 ---I can't but weep, to think how sad and lonely
 My future life will be.---Oh fickle fortune!
 How transient are thy smiles!---But I've been school'd
 To patience by my former hapless passion,
 Which I subdued by reason: and I'll try
 By reason to subdue this too.---But yonder
 Comes Parmeno, I see, with th' other slaves!
 He must by no means now be present, since
 'To him alone I formerly reveal'd,*
 That I abstain'd from her when first we married:
 And if he hears her frequent cries, I fear,
 That he'll discover her to be in labour.
 I must dispatch him on some idle errand,
 Until Philumena's deliver'd. †

S C E N E

* To him alone I formerly reveal'd, &c.] I cannot help thinking this circumstance a more than ordinary oversight in so correct a writer as Terence. By entrusting the inquisitive and babbling Parmeno with this secret, he certainly appears to acquaint him with more of the real truth, than it was even his own intention to have him supposed to know. In the last scene of the play Pamphilus conceals from him the discovery concerning Philumena; but that she had retired home, merely for the purpose of lying-in, is a fact which it would not be in his power to conceal. In regard to Laches, Phidippus, and Sostrata, this fact indeed is of no consequence: but Parmeno, who had been entrusted with the secret of his master's abstinence, must either conclude the child to be no son of Pamphilus, and consider his master as a contented cuckold, or guess at the real state of the case. Either way, the intention of the Poet is defeated; and what is still worse than even Parmeno's being acquainted with it himself, we know that he had communicated it to a couple of courtezans; so that this mystery is indeed likely to be what the French call le secret de la Comedie, though not in the sense that Terence himself proposed.

† Until Philumena's deliver'd.] It is observed by the Rev. Mr. Joseph Warton in his judicious critical papers in the Adventurer, that

S C E N E VI.

Enter at a distance PARMENO, SOSIA, and other Slaves with baggage.

Par. to Sofia.] Ay?

And had you such a wretched voyage, say you?

Sofia. O Parmeno, words can't express how wretched A sea-life is.

Par. Indeed?

Sofia. Oh happy Parmeno!

that "Terence super-abounds in soliloquies; * and that nothing can be more inartificial, " or improper, than the manner in which " he hath introduced them:" and we may add to this observation, that there is no play of Terence, in which he has so much transgressed that way, as in the Step-Mother. The present long soliloquy is a most flagrant instance of want of art and propriety. There are in it many affecting touches, and it informs us, at a proper period, of a very important part of the fable; though Mons. Diderot thinks that the return of Pamphilus would have been infinitely more interesting, if this discovery had been made before. The same ingenious French Writer lays it down as a rule without exception, that "a soliloquy " is an interval of repose in the action, and " of agitation in the character." This rule, I believe, ought to be unexceptionably followed in writing soliloquies: but the fact is directly opposite in the soliloquy now before us. The plot proceeds; but the action is carried on by the worst method possible, that of converting one of the personages into a kind of chorus, interpreting between the Poet and Audience, like Hamlet to Ophelia. The agitation of Pamphilus also is very different from that of Othello, referred to in a former note. It does not consist, as it ought in nature to have done, merely of deliberation and passion; but he enters into a minute detail, and repeats methodically every circumstance supposed to have past within. How much more dramatick would it have been to have had his bitter reflections interrupted by the intervention of Myrrhina; which would have given the Poet an opportunity of throwing that narrative part of the soliloquy into an affecting scene? I cannot help thinking that the tedious length of this ill-timed soliloquy, together with the want of vivacity in the first and last acts, was the chief reason of the low reputation of this piece among the critics of antiquity.

You little know the dangers you've escap'd,
 Who've never been at sea.---For not to dwell
 On other hardships, only think of this!
 I was on ship-board thirty days or more,
 In constant fear of sinking all the while,
 The winds so contrary, such stormy weather!

Par. Dreadful!

Sofia. I found it so, I promise you.
 In short, were I assur'd I must return,
 'Fore heaven, Parmeno, I'd run away
 Rather than go on board a ship again.

Par. You have been apt enough to think of that
 On flighter reasons, Sofia, before now.
 ---But yonder's my young master Pamphilus
 Standing before that door.---Go in! I'll to him,
 And see if he has any business for me.

[Exeunt Sofia, and the rest of the Slaves with the baggage.]

Master, are you here still?

[to Pamphilus.]

Pam. Oh Parmeno!

I waited for you.

Par. What's your pleasure, Sir?

Pam. Run to the Citadel.*

Par.

Par. Who?

Pam. You.

Par. The Citadel!

For what?

Pam. Find out one Callidemides,
My landlord of Mycone, who came over
In the same ship with me.

Par. A plague upon it!
Would not one swear that he had made a vow †
To break my wind, if he came home in safety,
With running on his errands?

Pam. Away, Sirrah!

Par. What message? Must I only find him out?

Pam. Yes; tell him, that it is not in my power
To meet him there to-day, as I appointed;
That he mayn't wait for me in vain.---Hence; fly!

Par. But I don't know him, if I see him, Sir.

Pam. impatiently.] Well; I'll describe him so, you cannot miss him.

* The Citadel.] This is no doubt to be understood, as Madam Dacier supposes, of the Fort, or Citadel, that defended the Piræum. It was at a considerable distance from the city, and therefore better suited to the design of Pamphilus, which was to keep Parmeno for some time at a distance. PATRICK.

† That he had made a vow, &c.] This is a facetious allusion to the custom among the ancients, of persons engaged in a dangerous voyage vowing to perform particular acts, in case they came home in safety. DONATUS.

470 THE STEP-MOTHER.

---A large, red, frizzle-pated, grofs, blear-eyed,
Ill-looking fellow.

Par. Plague on him, fay I!

---What if he fhould not come, Sir, muft I wait
Till evening for him?

Pam. Wait.---Be quick!

Par. Be quick?

I can't be quick,---I'm fo much tir'd. [Exit.

S C E N E VII.

P A M P H I L U S alone.

He's gone.

What fhall I do? Alas, I fcarcely know
How to conceal, as Myrrhina defir'd,
Her daughter's labour. Yet I pity her;
And what I can, I am resolv'd to do,
Confiftent with my duty: for my parents*
Muft be obey'd before my love.---But fee!
My father and Phidippus come this way.
How I fhall act, heav'n knows.

* Confiftent with my duty: for my parents, &c.] This reflection feems to be rather improper in this place: for the difcovery of Philumena's labour betrayed to Pamphilus the real motive of her departure: after which difcovery his anxiety proceeds entirely from the fupposed injury offered him, and his filial piety is from that period made ufe of merely as a pretence.

S C E N E VIII.

Enter at a distance LACHES and PHIDIPPUS.

Lach. Did not you say
She only waited my son's coming?

Phid. Ay.

Lach. They say that he's arriv'd. Let her return then!

Pam. behind.] What reason I shall frame to give my father,
For not recalling her, I cannot tell.

Lach. overhearing.] Whose voice was that?

Pam. to himself.] And yet I am resolv'd
To stand to my first purpose.

Lach. seeing Pamphilus.] He himself,
Whom I was speaking of!

Pam. going up.] My father, save you!

Lach. Save you, my son!

Phid. Pamphilus, welcome home!
I'm glad to see you safe, and in good health.

Pam. I do believe it.

Lach. Are you just now come?

Pam. Just now, Sir.

Lach. Well; and tell me, Pamphilus,
What has our kinsman Phania left us?

Pam.

Pam. Ah, Sir,
 He, his whole life-time, was a man of pleasure,
 And such men seldom much enrich their heirs.
 Yet he has left at least this praise behind him,
 "While he liv'd, he liv'd well."

Lach. And have you brought *
 Nothing home with you but this single sentence?

Pam. What he has left, tho' small, is of advantage.

Lach. Advantage? No, it is a disadvantage:
 For I could wish he was alive and well.

Phid. That you may safely; for your wishing for't
 Will never bring the man to life again:
 Yet I know well enough which you'd like best. [aside.

Lach. to Pam.] Phidippus order'd that Philumena
 Should be sent over to him yesterday.
 ---Say that you order'd it. [aside to Phidippus, thrusting him.

Phid. aside to Laches.] "Don't thrust me so. —
 I did. [aloud.

Lach. But now he'll send her home again.

Phid. I will.

Pam. Nay, nay, I know the whole affair.
 Since my arrival, I have heard it all.

* And have you brought, &c.] Tum tu igitur nihil attulisti hac plus unâ sententiâ. This is taken notice of by Donatus as a particular happy stroke of character; and indeed the idea of a covetous old man gaping for a fat legacy, and having his mouth stopped with a moral precept, is truly comick. See Hurd's Horace, vol. i. p. 272.

Lach. Now, plague upon these envious tale-bearers,
Who are so glad to fetch and carry news!

Pam. to Phid.] That I've endeavour'd to deserve no blame
From any of the family, I'm conscious.

Were it my inclination to relate,
How true I've been, how kind, and gentle tow'rs her,
I well might do it: But I rather chuse,
You should collect it from herself. For when
She, altho' now there's enmity between us,
Bespeaks me fair, you will the sooner credit
My disposition tow'rs her. And I call
The Gods to witness, that this separation
Has not arisen from my fault. But since
She thinks it is beneath her to comply
With Sostrata, and bear my mother's temper;
And since no other means are to be found
Of reconciliation, I, Phidippus,
Must leave my mother or Philumena.
Duty then calls me to regard my mother.

Lach. My Pamphilus, I cannot be displeas'd,
That you prefer to all the world a parent.
But take heed, your resentment don't transport you
Beyond the bounds of reason, Pamphilus.

Pam. Ah, what resentment can I bear to her,

474 T H E S T E P - M O T H E R.

Who ne'er did any thing I'd with undone,
But has so often deserv'd well of me?
I love her, own her worth, and languish for her;
For I have known her tenderness of soul:
And heaven grant, that with some other husband
She find that happiness she mist in me;
From whom the strong hand of necessity
Divorces her for ever!

Phid. That event

'Tis in your pow'r to hinder.

Lach. If you're wife,
Take your wife home again!

Pam. I cannot, father.

I must not slack my duty to my mother. [going.

Lach. Where are you going? [Exit Pamphilus.

S C E N E I X.

Manent L A C H E S, and P H I D I P P U S.

Phid. How perverse is this! [angrily.

Lach. Did not I say he'd take it ill, Phidippus,
And therefore begg'd you to send back your daughter?

Phid. 'Fore heaven I did not think him such a churl.

What! does he fancy I'll go cringing to him?

No;---if he'll take his wife, he may:---if not,

Let him refund her portion;---there's an end!

Lach. See there now! you're as fractious as himself.

Phid. You're come back obstinate and proud enough
In conscience, Pamphilus! [angrily.

Lach. This anger will subside,
Tho' he has had some cause to be disturb'd.

Phid. Because you've had a little money left you,
Your minds are so exalted!

Lach. What! d'ye quarrel
With Me too?

Phid. Let him take to-day to think on't,
And send me word if he will have her home,
Or not: that if she don't remain his wife,
She may be given to another. [Exit hastily.

S C E N E X.

L A C H E S alone.

Stay!

Hear me! one word, Phidippus! Stay!---He's gone.

---What is't to me? [angrily.] E'en let them fettle it

Among themselves; since nor my son, nor He

Take my advice, nor mind one word I say.

---This quarrel shall go round, I promise them:

I'll to my wife, the author of this mischief,

And vent my spleen and anger upon Her. * [Exit.

* And vent my spleen and anger upon her.] There are few scenes of comedy more truly humorous than the situation and behaviour of the two old gentlemen at the conclusion of this act. The natural, but uncommon conduct of Pamphilus; its effect on Phidippus;

his treatment of Laches and abrupt departure; and then again the emotions of Laches on the usage he had experienced from his son and his neighbour, are all very pleasant, and must produce an admirable effect in the representation.

A C T

A C T IV. S C E N E I.

Enter MYRRHINA hastily.

Myrr. WHAT shall I do!---Confusion!---which way turn?

Alas, what answer shall I make my husband?
For I dare say he heard the infant's cries,
He ran so hastily, without a word,
Into my daughter's chamber. If he finds
That she has been deliver'd, what excuse
To make, for having thus conceal'd her labour,
I can't devise.---But our door creaks!---'Tis He.
I am undone.

S C E N E II.

Enter PHIDIPPUS.

Phid. Soon as my wife perceiv'd*
That I was going to my daughter's chamber,

She

* Soon as my wife perceiv'd, &c.] Uxor ubi me ad filiam ire sensit, se duxit foras. Madam Dacier joins this scene to the third act, and assigns this verse as her reason for it. I have chosen rather to follow the old division, which seems to me to be the right. This scene

She stole directly out o'doors.---But there

She stands.---Why, how now, Myrrhina?

Holo, I say!

[She affects not to see him.]

Myrr. D'ye call me, husband?

Phid. Husband!

Am I your husband? am I ev'n a man?

For had you thought me to be either, Woman,

You would not dare to play upon me thus.

Myrr. How!

Phid. How?---My daughter has been brought to bed.

---Ha! are you dumb?---by whom?

Myrr. Is that a question

For you, who are her father, to demand?

Alas, by whom d'ye think, unless her husband?

Phid. So I believe: nor is it for a father

To suppose otherwise: But yet I wonder, scene brings on a new part of the plot; which occupies the rest of this fourth act. The continuity of the scenes being broken at the departure of Myrrhina proves nothing, or too much: for Terence often takes that liberty in the middle of an act, and the scene is certainly left vacant by Laches. Besides, Myrrhina does not, as Madam Dacier asserts, leave the house immediately on the entrance of Phidippus, in order to avoid him; but is frightened out of doors by his running to Philumena's chamber on hearing the cries of the Child. This, it is most natural to suppose, happened some time after he had returned home, and all these circumstances are with much greater propriety made to fill the interval between the two acts, than huddled into the compass of six lines. Terence, indeed, sometimes runs into that very absurdity; but I think we need not industriously force him out of his way on purpose to make him guilty of it.

That

That you have thus conceal'd her labour from us :
 Especially as she has been deliver'd
 At her full time, and all is as it shou'd be.
 What! Is there such perverseness in your nature,
 As rather to desire the infant's death,
 Than that his birth shou'd knit the bond of friendship
 Closer betwixt us; rather than my daughter,
 Against your liking, shou'd remain the wife
 Of Pamphilus?—I thought all this
 Had been Their fault, while You're alone to blame.

Myrr. How wretched am I!

Phid. Would to heav'n you were!
 ---But now I recollect your conversation
 When first we made this match, you then declar'd
 You'd not endure she should remain the wife
 Of Pamphilus, who follow'd mistresses,
 And pass'd the nights abroad.

Myrr. I had much rather
 He should think any reason, than the true one. [aside.]

Phid. I knew he kept a mistress; knew it long Ere you did, Myrrhina; but I could never Think that offence so grievous in a youth,
 Seeing 'tis natural to them all: and soon
 The time shall come, when he'll stand self-reprov'd.

But

But you, perverse and wilful as at first,
 Could take no rest, till you had brought away
 Your daughter, and annull'd the match, I made :
 There's not a circumstance, but loudly speaks
 Your evil disposition to the marriage.

Myrr. D'ye think me then so obstinate, that I,
 Who am her mother, shou'd betray this spirit,
 Granting the match were of advantage to us ?

Phid. Is it for you then to foresee, or judge
 What's of advantage to us ? You perhaps
 Have heard from some officious busy-body,
 That they have seen him going to his mistress,
 Or coming from her house : And what of that,
 So it were done discreetly, and but seldom ?
 Were it not better that we should dissemble
 Our knowledge of it, than pry into things,
 Which to appear to know wou'd make him hate us ?
 For could he tear her from his heart at once,
 To whom he'd been so many years attach'd,
 I should not think he were a man, or likely
 To prove a constant husband to my daughter.

Myrr. No more of Pamphilus, or my offence ;
 Since you will have it so !---Go, find him out ;
 Confer with him alone, and fairly ask him,

Will he, or no, take back Philumena?
 If he avows his inclination to't,
 Restore her; but if he refuses it,
 Allow, I've ta'en good counsel for my child.

Phid. Grant, he shou'd prove repugnant to the match,
 Grant, you perceiv'd this in him, Myrrhina;
 Was not I present? had not I a right
 To be consulted in't?---It makes me mad,
 That you should dare to act without my order:
 And I forbid you to remove the Child
 Out of this house.---But what a fool am I,
 Enjoining her obedience to my orders!
 I'll in, and charge the servants, not to suffer
 The infant to be carried forth. [Exit.

S C E N E I I I.

M Y R R H I N A alone.

No woman more unhappy than myself:
 For how he'd bear it, did he know the whole,
 When he has taken such offence at this,
 Which is of much less consequence, is plain.
 Nor by what means to reconcile him to it,

482 T H E S T E P - M O T H E R .

Can I devise. After so many ills,
 This only misery there yet remain'd,
 To be oblig'd to educate the child,
 Ignorant of the father's quality.
 For he, the cruel spoiler of her honour,
 Taking advantage of the night and darkness,
 My daughter was not able to discern
 His person; nor to force a token from him,
 Whereby he might be afterwards discover'd:
 But he, at his departure, pluck'd by force
 A Ring from off her finger.---* I fear too,
 That Pamphilus will not contain himself,
 Nor longer keep our secret, when he finds
 Another's child acknowledg'd for his own. [Exit.]

S C E N E I V .

S O S T R A T A , P A M P H I L U S .

Sostr. Dear son, I'm not to learn that you suppose,
 Tho' you dissemble your suspicions to me,

* A Ring from off her finger.] This is a preparation for the Catastrophe; for the Ring produces the discovery. DONATUS.

This preparation being made by a folloquy, which tells the circumstance directly to the audience, is not so artful as might be expected from Terence.

That

That my ill-humour caus'd your wife's departure.
But by my trust in heaven, and hopes in you,
I never knowingly did any thing
To draw her hatred and disgust upon me.
I always thought you lov'd me, and to-day
You have confirm'd my faith: for even now
Your father has been telling me within,
How much you held me dearer than your love.
Now therefore, on my part, I am resolv'd
To equal you in all good offices;
That you may know your mother ne'er withholds
The just rewards of filial piety:
Finding it then both meet for your repose,
My Pamphilus, as well as my good name,
I have determin'd to retire directly
From hence into the country with your father;
So shall my presence be no obstacle,
Nor any cause remain, but that your wife
Return immediately.

Pam. What thoughts are these?

Shall her perverseness drive you out of town?
It shall not be: nor will I draw, good mother,
That censure on me, that my obstinacy,
Not your good-nature was the cause.---Besides,

That you should quit relations, friends, diversions,
On my account, I can't allow.

Softa. Alas,

Those things have no allurements for me now.
While I was young, and 'twas the season for them,
I had my share, and I am satisfied.

'Tis now my chief concern to make my age
Easy to all, * that no one may regret
My lengthen'd life, nor languish for my death.
Here, altho' undeservedly, I see †

My preference odious: I had best retire:
So shall I best cut off all discontent,
Absolve myself from this unjust suspicion,
And humour Them. Permit me then to shun
The common scandal thrown upon the sex.

Pam. How fortunate in every thing but one,
Having so good a mother,---such a wife!

* That no one may regret my lengthen'd life, &c.] This idea of the long life of a Step-Mother being odious to her family is applied in a very beautiful and uncommon manner by Shakespeare.

Now, fair Hippolita, our nuptial hour
Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, oh, methinks how slow
This old moon wanes! She lingers my desires,
Like to a Step-Dame, or a Dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.
Midsummer Night's Dream.

† Here, altho' undeservedly, I see, &c.] Though Softa industriously endeavours to stifle her resentment, yet, in spite of herself, some little indignation, arising from a sense of the ill usage she has received, will mix in what she says; which the Poet has purposely thrown into her discourse, in order to paint the manners, and express character.

DONATUS.

Softa.

Soфра. Patience, my Pamphilus! Is't possible
You can't endure one inconvenience in her?
If in all else, as I believe, you like her,
Dear son, be rul'd by me, and take her home!

Pam. Wretch that I am!

Soфра. And I am wretched too:
For this grieves 'me, my son, no less than you.

S C E N E V .

Enter L A C H E S .

Lach. I have been standing at a distance, wife,
And overheard your conversation with him.
You have done wisely to subdue your temper,
And freely to comply with what, perhaps,
Hereafter must be done.

Soфра. And let it be! *

Lach. Now then retire with me into the country:
There I shall bear with You, and You with Me.

Soфра. I hope we shall.

* And let it be!] Fors fuat pol! Madam Dacier refines prodigiously on these three words, and supposing great difficulty in them, explains them by a very long periphrasis. Donatus seems to consider them as mere words of assent, agreeable to the mild charafter of Soфраta; and if I might venture to correct a French translation, I would say that Madam Dacier might have rendered them more properly by the common expression of A la bonne heure!

Lach.

Lach. Go in then, and pack up
The necessaries you would carry with you.
Away!

Soфра. I shall obey your orders. [Exit.

Pam. Father!

Lach. Well, Pamphilus?

Pam. My mother leave the town?

By no means.

Lach. Why?

Pam. Because I'm yet uncertain
What I shall do about my wife.

Lach. How's that?

What would you do, but take her home again?

Pam. 'Tis what I wish for, and can scarce forbear it.
But I'll not alter what I first design'd.

What's best I'll follow: and I'm well convinc'd
That there's no other way to make them friends,
But that I should not take her home again.

Lach. You don't know that: but 'tis of no importance
Whether they're friends or not, when Soфрата
Is gone into the country. We old folks
Are odious to the young. We'd best retire.
In short we're grown a by-word, Pamphilus,

The old man and old woman."---But I see ippus coming in good time. Let's meet him!

S C E N E VI.

Enter PHIDIPPUS.

bid. to Phil. within.] I'm angry with you---'fore heaven,
very angry,
Imena!---You've acted shamefully.
ough You indeed have some excuse for't, seeing r mother urg'd you to't; but She has none.

The old man and old woman.] *Odiſſa hæc adoleſcentulis. E medio æquom excedere eſt.
no jam nos fabulæ ſumus, Pamphile, Senex ſnus.* There is nothing, I ſuppoſe, in words, which provokes a ſmile. Yet mour is ſtrong. In his ſolicitude to pro-his ſon's ſatiſfaction, he lets fall a fentruly characteriſtick, and which old ſually take great pains to conceal; I the acknowledgment of that ſuſpicious contempt, which is natural to old age.
e a picture of life in the representation weakneſs, might, in other circumſtanwe created ſome pleaſantry; but the oc-which forced it from him, diſcovering, ſame time, the amiable diſpoſition of the ; covers the ridicule of it, or more y converts it into an object of eſteem.
URD's Differtation on the ſeveral Provinces of the Drama.
not help thinking that the latter part ingenious remark is rather too refi-f the characteriſtick humour of the paſſage is ſtrong, the ridicule ſeems rather intended to be heightened by the comick turn of expreſſion. The complections of men are ſo different, and the muſcles of ſome are ſo much more eaſily relaxed into a ſmile than thoſe of others, that it is difficult to pronounce exactly in what degree ſuch a ſober piece of pleaſantry would act upon them.

But there are many inſtances of paſſages of true humour, which do not immediately raiſe a laugh, or even provoke a ſmile: and it is ſufficient if they are conceived in the ſame vein of pleaſantry, that runs though the reſt of the work. The ſtroke of character before us ſeems to me to be juſt in the ſame ſtile with that which this critick takes notice of,
in the third act, and of which he ſays, that “ it is an obſervation drawn naturally and “ forcibly from Laches; — and this too with“ out deſign; which is important, and ſhews
“ the diſtinction of what, in the more re-
“ ſtrained ſenſe of the word, we call humour,
“ from other modes of pleaſantry.”

Lach.

Lach. You're come upon us in good time, Phidippus;
Just in the time we wanted you.

Phid. What now?

Pam. What answer shall I give them? *how explain? [aside.

Lach. Inform your daughter, Sostrata will hence
Into the country; so Philumena
Need not dread coming home again.

Phid. Ah, friend!

Your wife has never been in fault at all:
All this has sprung from my wife Myrrhina.
The case is alter'd. She confounds us, Laches.

Pam. So that I may not take her home again,
Confound affairs who will! [aside.

Phid. I, Pamphilus,
Would fain, if possible, make this alliance
Perpetual between our families.
But if you cannot like it, take the Child.*

Pam. He knows of her delivery. Confusion! [aside.

Lach. The Child! what Child?

Phid. We've got a grandson, Laches.

* How explain?] Quo pacto hoc aperiam?
This is the common reading, which Bentley and Madam Dacier convert to aperiam, how shall I hide it? I see no occasion for any alteration. Pamphilus did not mean to divulge the secret; but in his present embarrassment

he might easily be perplexed how to assign plausible reasons for his way of acting.

+ Take the Child.] According to law, the Male Children always followed the father.

DONATUS.

For when my daughter left your house, she was
With child, it seems, altho' I never knew it
Before this very day.

Lach. Fore heav'n, good news !
And I rejoice to hear a child is born,
And that your daughter had a safe delivery.
But what a woman is your wife, Phidippus ?
Of what a disposition ? to conceal
Such an event as this ? I can't express
How much I think she was to blame.

Phid. This pleases me, no more than you, good Laches.

Pam. Altho' my mind was in suspense before,
My doubts all vanish now. I'll ne'er recall her,
Since she brings home with her another's child. [aside.

Lach. There is no room for choice now, Pamphilus.

Pam. Confusion ! [aside.

Lach. We've oft wish'd to see the day,
When you should have a child, to call you father.
That day's now come. The Gods be thank'd !

Pam. Undone ! [aside.

Lach. Recall your wife, and don't oppose my will.

Pam. If she had wish'd for children by me, father,
Or to remain my wife, I'm very sure
She never would have hid this matter from me :

But now I see her heart divorc'd from me,
And think we never can agree hereafter,
Wherefore should I recall her?

Lach. A young woman
Did as her mother had persuaded her.
Is that so wonderful? and do you think
To find a woman without any fault?
—Or is't because the men are ne'er to blame? [ironically.

Phid. Consider with yourselves then, gentlemen,
Whether you'll part with her, or call her home.
What my wife does, I cannot help, you know.
Settle it as you please, you've my consent.
But for the child, what shall be done with him?

Lach. A pretty question truly! come what may,
Send his own bantling home to him of course,
That we may educate him.

Pam. When his own *
Father abandons him, I educate him?

Lach. What said you? how! not educate him, say you?
Shall we expose him rather, Pamphilus?

* When his own father abandons him, I educate him? [Quem ipse neglexit pater, ego alam? Donatus on this passage takes notice of a reading, which entirely changes the sense. Quem ipsa neglexit, pater; where we have ipsa for ipse, and Pater is a vocative. "Shall I, father, take care of a child, whom the mother herself has abandoned?" But the other reading is certainly the best. It is full of passion, and is strongly descriptive of the situation of Pamphilus. There is indeed an objection that may be offered, from a supposition, that this were betraying Philumena. But we are to imagine it a start of passion, and that Laches, totally ignorant of that secret, catches at the last words Ego alam? "I educate him?" which the actor might deliver with greater energy than the preceding. PATRICK.

What madnefs is all this?—My breath, and blood!
 I can contain no longer. You oblige me
 To fpeak, againft my will, before Phidippus:
 Think you I'm ignorant whence flow thofe tears?
 Or why you're thus diforder'd and diftrefs'd?
 Firft, when you gave as a pretence, you could not Recall your wife in reverence to your mother,
 She promis'd to retire into the country.
 But now, fince that excufe is taken from you,
 You've made her private lying-in another.
 You are miftaken if you think me blind
 To your intentions.—That you might at laft
 Bring home your ftray affections to your wife,
 How long a time to wean you from your miftrefs
 Did I allow? your wild expence upon her
 How patiently I bore? I prefs'd, intreated,
 That you would take a wife. 'Twas time, I faid.
 At my repeated instances you married,
 And, as in duty bound to do, complied:
 But now your heart is gone abroad again
 After your miftrefs, whom to gratify,
 You throw this wanton infult on your wife.
 For I can plainly fee you are relaps'd
 Into your former life again.

Pam. Me?

Lach. You.

And 'tis base in you, to invent false causes
Of quarrel with your wife, that you may live
In quiet with your mistress, having put
This witness from you. This your wife perceiv'd.
For was there any other living reason,
Wherefore she should depart from you?

Phid. He's right:

That was the very thing.

Pam. I'll take my oath,
'Twas none of those, that you have mention'd.

Lach. Ah,
Recall your wife: or tell me, why you will not.

Pam. 'Tis not convenient now.

Lach. Take home the child then.
For he at least is not in fault. I'll see
About the mother afterwards.

Pam. to himself.] Ev'ry way
I am a wretch, nor know I what to do:
My father has me in the toils, and I,
By struggling to get loose, am more entangled.
I'll hence, since present I shall profit little.
For I believe they'll hardly educate
The child against my will; especially Seeing my step-mother will second me. [Exit.]

S C E N E V I I.

Manent P H I D I P P U S, L A C H E S.

Lach. Going? how's that? and give me no plain answer!
—D'ye think he's in his senses?—Well—send home
The child to me, Phidippus. I'll take care on't.

Phid. I will.—I cannot wonder that my wife
Took this so ill. Women are passionate,
And can't away with such affronts as these.
This was their quarrel: nay she told me so,
Though before Him I did not care to speak on't:
Nor did I credit it at first; but now
'Tis evident, and I can plainly see
He has no stomach to a wife.

Lach. Phidippus,
How shall I act? What's your advice?

Phid. How act?
I think 'twere best to seek this wench, his mistress.
Let us expostulate the matter with her,
Speak to her roundly, nay, e'en threaten her,
If she has aught to do with him hereafter.

Lach. I'll follow your advice.—Ho, boy! [enter a boy.] run over

To

To Bacchis. Tell her to come forth to me. [Exit boy.

—I must beseech you also to continue
Your kind assistance to me in this business.

Phid. Ah, Laches! I have told you all along,
And I repeat it now, that 'tis my wish
To render our alliance firm and lasting,
If possible, as I have hopes it will be.
—But would you have me present at your conference
With Bacchis? *

Lach. No; go, seek the child a nurse. [Exit Phidippus.

S C E N E VIII.

Enter BACCHIS attended by her Women.

Bacc. to herself.] 'Tis not for nothing Laches wants to see me;
And, or I'm much deceiv'd, I guess the cause.

Lach. to himself.] I must take care my anger don't transport
Beyond the bounds of prudence, which may hinder [me
My gaining my design on her, and urge me
To do what I may afterwards repent.

* But wou'd you have me present, &c.] Phidippus utters these words with an air of disinclination to be present at this conference; and the characters are well sustained in this instance: for it would not become him to discourse coolly with a courtesan whom he supposed to be the seducer of Pamphilus from his daughter, although he might very properly advise such a conversation, as conducive to the peace of both families.

DONATUS.

I'll to her.—[going up.] Save you, Bacchis!

Bacc. Save you, Laches!

Lach. Bacchis, I do not doubt but you're surpriz'd
That I should send the boy to call you forth.

Bacc. Ay, and I'm fearful too, when I reflect Both who and what I am: left my vocation
Should prejudice me in your good opinion.
My conduct I can fully justify.

Lach. If you speak truth, you're in no danger, woman.
For I'm arriv'd at that age, when a trespass
Would not be easily forgiven in me.
Wherefore I study to proceed with caution,
And to do nothing rashly. If you act,
And will continue to act honestly,
It were ungenerous to do you wrong,
And seeing you deserve it not, unjust.

Bacc. Truly, this conduct asks my highest thanks;
For he who does the wrong, and then asks pardon,
Makes but a sorry reparation for it.
But what's your pleasure?

Lach. You receive the visits
Of my son Pamphilus——

Bacc. Ah! ——

Lach. Let me speak.

Before he married I endur'd your love.

—Stay! I've not finish'd all I have to say.—

He is now married. You then, while 'tis time,

Seek out another, and more constant friend.

For he will not be fond of you for ever,

Nor you, good faith, for ever in your bloom.

Bacc. Who tells you that I still receive the visits
Of Pamphilus?

Lach. His step-mother.

Bacc. I?

Lach. You.

And therefore has withdrawn her daughter: therefore Meant secretly to kill the new-born child.

Bacc. Did I know any thing, to gain your credit,
More sacred than an oath, I'd use it, Laches,
In solemn protestation to assure you,
That I have had no commerce with your son,
Since he was married. *

Lach. Good girl! But d'ye know

* Since he was married.] Me segregatum habuisse, uxorem ut duxit, a me Pamphilum.
How shall we reconcile this solemn protestation of Bacchis to a passage in the first act?

Ph. Quid interea! ibatne ad Bacchidem?

Par. Cotidie.

Phi. But tell me;
Went he meanwhile to Bacchis?

Par. Every day.

Are we to suppose that Bacchis, who behaves so candidly in every other instance, wantonly perjures herself in this? or that the Poet, by a kind of infatuation strangely attending him in this Comedy, flatly contradicts himself?

What

What I would farther have you do?

Bacc. Inform me.

Lach. Go to the women here, and offer them
The same oath. Satisfy their minds, and clear Yourself from all reproach in this.

Bacc. I'll do't.

Altho' I'm sure no other of my calling
Would shew herself before a married woman
Upon the same occasion.—But it hurts me
To see your son suspected on false grounds;
And that to those, who owe him better thoughts,
His conduct should seem light. For he deserves
All my best offices.

Lach. Your conversation has much wrought upon me,
Gain'd my good-will, and alter'd my opinion.
For not the women only thought thus of you,
But I believ'd it too. Now therefore since
I've found you better than my expectation,
Prove still the same, and make my friendship sure.
If otherwise—But I'll contain myself. I'll not Say any thing severe.—But I advise you,
Rather experience what a friend I am,
Than what an enemy.

Bacc. I'll do my best.

S C E N E I X .

Enter PHIDIPPUS and a Nurse.

Phid. to the Nurse.] Nay, you shall want for nothing at my I'll give you all that's needful in abundance. [house;
But when you've eat and drank your fill yourself,
Take care to satisfy the infant too.

Lach. I see the father of Philumena
Coming this way. He brings the child a nurse.
---Phidippus, Bacchis fwears most solemnly---

Phid. Is this she?

Lach. Ay.

Phid. They never mind the Gods,
Nor do I think the Gods mind them.

Bacc. Here are
My waiting-women : take them, and extort
By any kind of torment the truth from them.
---Our present business is, I take it, this :
That I should win the wife of Pamphilus
To return home ; which so I but effect,
I sha'n't regret the fame of having done

What others of my calling would avoid.*

Lach. Phidippus, we've discover'd that in fact
We both suspected our wives wrongfully.
Let's now try Her: for if your wife perceives
Her own suspicions also are unjust,
She'll drop her anger. If my son's offended,
Because his wife conceal'd her labour from him,
That's but a trifle; he'll be soon pleas'd.
---And truly I see nothing in this matter,
That need occasion a divorce.

Phid. Fore heav'n,
I wish that all may end well.

Lach. Here she is:
Examine her; she'll give you satisfaction.

Phid. What needs all this to Me? You know my mind
Already, Laches: do but make Them easy.

Lach. Bacchis, be sure you keep your promise with me.

Bacc. Shall I go in then for that purpose?

* What others of my calling wou'd avoid.] Terence, by his uncommon art, has attempted many innovations with great success. In this comedy he introduces, contrary to received prejudices, a good Step-Mother, and an honest courtesan; but at the same time he so carefully assigns their motives of action, that by him alone every thing seems reconcilable to truth and nature; for this is just the opposite of what he mentions in another place, as the common privilege of all poets, "to paint good matrons, and wicked courtezans." DONATUS.

Lach. Ay,

Go in; remove their doubts, * and satisfy them.

Bacc. I will; altho' I'm very sure my presence
Will be unwelcome to them; for a wife,
When parted from her husband, to a mistress
Is a sure enemy.

Lach. They'll be your friends,
When once they know the reason of your coming.

Phid. Ay, ay, they'll be your friends, I promise you,
When they once learn your errand; for you'll free
Them from mistake, Yourself from all suspicion.

Bacc. I'm cover'd with confusion. I'm ashamed
To see Philumena.---[to her women.] You two, in after me.

[Exeunt Phid. Bacc. &c.]

LACHES alone. †

What is there that could please me more than This,
That Bacchis, without any loss, should gain

* Go in; remove their doubts, &c.] It is not unlikely that the method of bringing about the discovery by means of Bacchis going into the family, gave Sir Richard Steele the hint of sending Sealand to Indiana's lodgings for the same purpose. When we are professedly imitating one part of an author, we naturally enough make use of other passages in his works; and what inclines me the more to this conjecture, is that Steele makes exactly the same use of the Bracelet, that Terence does of the Ring, though the presence of Isabella rendered it not so necessary. Such an inconsistency might very possibly proceed from imitation.

† Laches alone.] This soliloquy seems to be rather idle and unnecessary: but it is but justice to observe of this act in general, that the perplexity of the fable is very artfully increased, and that the incidents tending to the catastrophe are well contrived and most naturally introduced.

Favour from Them, and do Me service too?

For if she really has withdrawn herself

From Pamphilus, it will increase, she knows,

Her reputation, interest, and honour:

Since by this generous act she will at once

Oblige my son, and make us all her friends. [Exit.

A C T

A C T V. S C E N E I.

P A R M E N O · alone.

I'Faith my master holds my labour cheap,
 To fend me to the Citadel for nothing,
 Where I have waited the whole day in vain
 For his Myconian, Callidemides.
 There was I fitting, gaping like a fool,
 And running up, if any one appear'd,
 ---"Are you, Sir, a Myconian?"---"No not I."---
 ---"But your name's Callidemides?"---"Not it."---
 "And have not you a guest here, of the name
 "Of Pamphilus?"---All answer'd, No.
 In short, I don't believe there's such a man.
 At last I grew ashamed, and so sneak'd off.
 ---But is't not Bacchis that I see come forth
 From our new kinsman? What can she do there?

S C E N E

S C E N E II.

Enter B A C C H I S.

Bacc. Oh Parmeno, I'm glad I met with you.
Run quick to Pamphilus. *

Par. On what account?

Bacc. Tell him, that I desire he'd come.

Par. To you?

Bacc. No; to Philumena.

Par. Why, what's the matter?

Bacc. Nothing to You; so ask no questions.

Par. Must I

Say nothing else?

Bacc. Yes; tell him too,
That Myrrhina acknowledges the Ring,
Which formerly he gave me, as her daughter's.

Par. I understand you. But is that all?

Bacc. All.

He'll come the moment that you tell him that.
What! do you loiter?

* Ran quick, &c.] Parmeno is drawn as of a lazy and inquisitive character. Terence therefore humourously contrives to keep him in continual employment and total ignorance. DONATUS.

Par.

Par. No, i'faith, not I.

I have not had it in my pow'r, I've been
So bandied to and fro, sent here and there,
Trotting, and running up and down all day. [Exit.

S C E N E III.

B A C C H I S alone. *

What joy have I procur'd to Pamphilus
By coming here to-day! what blessings brought him!
And from how many sorrows rescued him!
His son, by his and their means nearly lost,
I've sav'd; a wife, he meant to put away,
I have restor'd; and from the strong suspicions
Of Laches and Phidippus set him free.
---Of all these things the Ring has been the cause.
For I remember, near ten months ago,
That he came running home to me one evening,
Breathless, alone, and much inflam'd with wine,
Bringing this Ring. I was alarm'd at it.
“ Prithce, my dearest Pamphilus, said I, †

“ Whence

* Bacchis alone.] The rest of the argument is told in soliloquy. DONATUS.
So much the worse.

† Prithce, my dearest Pamphilus, &c.] Terence studies brevity: for in the Greek these things are acted, not related. DONATUS.
This

“ Whence comes all this confusion ? whence this Ring ?
 “ Tell me, my love.”---He put me off at first :
 Perceiving this, it made me apprehend
 Something of serious import, and I urg’d him
 More earnestly to tell me.---He confess’d,
 That, as he came along, he had committed
 A rape upon a virgin---whom he knew not---
 And, as she struggled, forc’d from her that Ring :
 Which Myrrhina now seeing on my finger,
 Immediately acknowledg’d, and enquir’d,
 How I came by it. I told all this story : *

3 T

Whence

This is so curious a piece of information, communicated by Donatus, that I am surprised that no former editors or translators have taken notice of it. If it means, that in the Greek the circumstances of the catastrophe were thrown into action, Terence may indeed have studied brevity, but he has not much consulted the entertainment of his audience. That this is the meaning of this passage in Donatus, I think is plain. The conversation, of which Bacchis here speaks, must have taken place before the opening of the play ; so that it can hardly be supposed to have been introduced as a scene in the original Greek : besides, the note of Donatus immediately preceding seems to confirm this interpretation, as well as what he says soon after, conclufit narrationem fabulæ, more suo: ne hæc in futuro actu expectaremus. “ He has here “ concluded the story of the fable, after his “ usual manner: that we may not expect “ these things to come out in a future “ act.”

* I told all this story: Thence ’twas discover’d, &c.] It is not sufficient, oh thou writer of Comedy, to have said in your plan, “ I will introduce a young man but weakly attached to a courtesan; he shall quit her; shall marry, and be fond of his wife; the wife shall be amiable, and her husband promise himself a happy life with her: Moreover, he shall lie by her for two months without touching her, and yet she shall prove with child. I must have a good Step-Mother, and a Courtesan of sentiment. I cannot do without a rape; and I will suppose it to be committed in the street by a young man drunk.”——Very well: Courage! Go on; huddle strange circumstances one upon another; I consent to it. Your fable will be wonderful, to be sure. But do not forget, that you must redeem all this marvellous in your plot by a multitude of common incidents that atone for it, and give it the air of probability. DIDEROT.

The

Whence 'twas discover'd, that Philumena
 Was she who had been ravish'd, and the child
 Conceived from that encounter.---That I've been
 The instrument of all these joys I'm glad,
 Tho' other courtezans would not be so;
 Nor is it for our profit and advantage,
 That lovers should be happy in their marriage.
 But never will I, for my calling'-sake,
 Suffer ingratitude to taint my mind.
 I found him, while occasion gave him leave,

The above extract from Monf. Diderot's Essay on Dramatick Poetry is a very elegant compliment to the genius of our poet, and the art displayed in the play before us. The outline of the fable is undoubtedly beautiful; but on the whole, I cannot think that outline so well filled as might be expected from the master-hand of Terence. There are many circumstances happily contrived to create an agreeable perplexity, but in other parts of the piece there prevails an uncommon coldness and want of spirit. The same ingenious French Critick has a very fine passage in the Essay above mentioned. "Al" though," says he, "the quickness of the " movement varies according to the diffe" rent species of the Drama, yet the action
 " always proceeds. It does not stop even be" tween the acts. 'Tis a mass loosened from
 " the top of a rock: its velocity increases in " proportion to its descent; and it bounds
 " from place to place, according to the ob" stacles which it meets with in its way."—
 According to this comparison, which is, I think, as just as it is beautiful, what shall we say to the first act of this Comedy? Instead of a mass falling from a rock, it seems an unwieldy mass, which can with difficulty be heaved from the ground: or, to change the allusion, the Poet treats his fable, as the Savoyards do a clock-work figure, which they are obliged to wind up, before they can set it in motion.—And then of what does the last act consist? All the materials, which should compose it, are exhausted in the interval supposed to pass between that act and the fourth, a fault, which dramatick writers, of inferior genius to Terence, are very apt to fall into. But surely there cannot be an error more fatal to the catastrophe of a piece; nor any fault more fatal to the piece than an inanimate catastrophe: "for if," continues Monf. Diderot, "the above com" parison is just; if it is true that there will " be so much less of discourse as there is " more of action, there ought to be more

 " dialogue than incident in the former acts,
 " and more incident than dialogue in the " latter."

Kind,

Kind, pleasant, and good-humour'd: and this marriage
Happen'd unluckily, I must confess.

Yet I did nothing to estrange his love;
And since I have receiv'd much kindness from him,
'Tis fit I shou'd endure this one affliction.

S C E N E I V.

Enter at a distance PAMPHILUS and PARMENO.

Pam. Be sure you prove this to me, Parmeno;
Prithee, be sure on't. Do not bubble me
With false and short-liv'd joy.

Par. 'Tis even so.

Pam. For certain?

Par. Ay, for certain.

Pam. I'm in heaven,
If this be so.

Par. You'll find it very true.

Pam. Hold, I beseech you.---I'm afraid, I think
One thing, while you relate another.

Par. Well?

Pam. You said, I think, "that Myrrhina discover'd
"The Ring on Bacchis' finger, was her own."

Par. She did.

Pam. "The same I gave her formerly.

"---And Bacchis bad you run and tell me this."

Is it not so?

Par. I tell you, Sir, it is.

Pam. Who is more fortunate, more blest than I?

---What shall I give you for this news? what? what?

I don't know.

Par. But I know.

Pam. What?

Par. Just nothing.

For I see nothing of advantage to you,

Or in the message, or myself.

Pam. Shall I

Permit you to go unrewarded; you,

Who have restor'd me ev'n from death to life?

Ah, Parmeno, d'ye think me so ungrateful?

---But yonder's Bacchis standing at the door.

She waits for me, I fancy. I'll go to her.

Bacc. [seeing him.] Pamphilus, save you!

Pam. Bacchis! my dear Bacchis!

My guardian, my protectress!

Bacc. All is well:

And I'm o'erjoy'd at it.

Pam. Your actions speak it.
You're still the charming girl I ever found you.
Your presence, company, and conversation,
Come where you will, bring joy and pleasure with them.

Bacc. And you, in faith, are still the same as ever,
The sweetest, most engaging man on earth.

Pam. Ha ! ha ! ha ! that speech from you, dear Bacchis ?

Bacc. You lov'd your wife with reason, Pamphilus :
Never, that I remember, did I see her
Before to-day ; and she's a charming woman.

Pam. Speak truth !

Bacc. So heaven help me, Pamphilus !

Pam. Say, have you told my father any part
Of this tale ?

Bacc. Not a word.

Pam. Nor is there need.
Let all be hush ! I would not have it here,
As in a comedy,* where every thing

* As in a Comedy.] Terence here with reason endeavours to make the most of a circumstance peculiar to his play. In other Comedies, every body, Actors as well as Spectators, are at last equally acquainted with the whole intrigue and Catastrophe ; and it would even be a defect in the plot, were there any obscurity remaining. But Terence, like a true Genius, makes himself superior to Rules, and adds new beauties to his piece by forfaking them. His reasons for concealing from part of the personages of the Drama the principal incident of the Plot, are so plausible and natural, that he could not have followed the beaten track without offending against manners and decency. This bold and uncommon turn is one of the chief graces of the Play. DACIER.

See the notes to the third act of this Comedy.

Is known to every body. Here, those persons
Whom it concerns, already know it; They,
Who 'twere not meet should know it, never shall.

Bacc. I promise you, it may with ease be hid.
Myrrhina told Phidippus, that my oath
Convinc'd her, and she held you clear.

Pam. Good! good!
All will be well, and all, I hope, end well.

Par. May I know, Sir, what good I've done to-day?
And what's the meaning of your conversation?

Pam. No.

Par. I suspect however.---“ I restore him
From death to life?”---which way?---

Pam. Oh, Parmeno,
You can't conceive the good you've done to-day,
From what distress you have deliver'd me.

Par. Ay, but I know, and did it with design.

Pam. Oh, I'm convinc'd of that. [ironically.]

Par. Did Parmeno
Ever let slip an opportunity
Of doing what he ought, Sir?

Pam. Parmeno,
In after me!

Par. I follow.---By my troth,

I've done more good to-day without design,
Than ever with design in all my life.---
Clap your hands!

* Clap your hands!] Terence had recourse to the expedient of double plots. And this, I suppose, is what gained him the reputation of being the most artificial writer for the Stage. The Hecyra [The Step-Mother] is the only one of his Comedies, of the true antient cast. And we know how it came off in the representation. That ill success and the simplicity of its conduct have continued to draw upon it the same unfavourable treatment from the critics, to this day; who constantly speak of it, as much inferior to the rest; whereas, for the genuine beauty of dramatick design and the observance, after the ancient Greek manner, of the nice dependency and coherence of the fable, throughout, it is, indisputably, to every reader of true taste, the most masterly and exquisite of the whole collection.

HURD's Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

Though I would not attempt to justify the town-criticks of the days of Terence, who passed a sentence of absolute condemnation on this Comedy, yet I cannot think that it failed merely for want of duplicity of intrigue; nor that the Criticks of Horace's time esteemed Terence the most artificial writer for the stage, only because he combined two stories into one. May we not, at this day, speak of the uncommon art of Terence in the preparation of his incidents, and conduct of his fable, without being supposed to imply a particular commendation of his double plots? and may we not allow the beauty of design in writing on a single plot, and yet at the same time discover so many capital defects in the conduct of a particular piece, as may reduce it to a much lower standard of merit than that of other Comedies constructed on a less correct model? Tous les genres, says Monsr. Voltaire, sont bons, hors le genre ennuyeux.

For my part, I had much rather see or read the Comedy of the Provoked Husband, which so flagrantly transgresses the unity of action that it is almost two plays in one, than the cold production of any affected lover of simplicity, who, on the sole merit of a single plot, tells a dull story in a dull manner, without any interest of incident, strength of character, or vivacity of dialogue. It is not the insertion of an Episode that will enliven the fable; but the just delineation of character and proper conduct of the plot, simple or complicated, that gives it spirit. Monsr. Voltaire justly observed, in his letters on our nation, that the Love-Episode in Addison's Cato throws a languor on the whole piece. The Theatre affords a constant evidence of the same fact in Tate's alteration of King Lear; and, to instance rather in Comedy, the Andrian of our Author would be much better without the story of Charinus. Interesting incidents, however, there must be: or insipidity will ensue, unless the attention be diverted from examining the plot, by Buffoonery; which is as vicious in the manners of Comedy, as Pantomime changes in the fable. Terence, "whose taste was "abhorrent from ribaldry," has, I think, in this play suffered the interest of his piece to languish; and if there is any just observation in the preceding notes, there is a lameness, notwithstanding the simplicity, in the conduct of the fable. The first act, being entirely consumed in narration, is very inartificial, and what is still worse, redundant; the discovery of the main incident is made in the most uninteresting manner, by a long soliloquy in the third act; and the catastrophe itself is managed in the same cold manner, by another long soliloquy; the incidents, that should have filled the fifth act, being injudiciously precluded by what is supposed to pass in the preceding interval.—In point of character also, The Step-Mother has much less merit than the rest of our author's pieces. Laches and Phidippus are far inferior to Simo, Menedemus, Chremes, Micio, Demea, &c. nor is Pamphilus equal to the Pamphilus of the Andrian, or Phædria, or Æschinus, &c.—This play has by some Criticks been coupled with the Self-Tormentor for purity of stile and beauty of sentiment. It is not void of those graces, no more than it is wholly destitute of art in the construction of the plot, but surely it possesses them in a much less eminent degree than the Self-Tormentor. Can the narration of Parmeno, not to dwell on its being needless, be compared with that of Menedemus? or with that of Simo in the Andrian; or that of Geta in the Phormio?—I have endeavoured to omit no opportunity of taking notice of the beautiful passages of this play; and I have indeed been more than ordinarily assiduous to point them out, in order to shew that in the most indifferent productions of a great author, there are some things worthy our attention and imitation. On the whole, however, I am sorry to be obliged to differ once more from the learned and ingenious Critick above cited: And I cannot help thinking it rather singular, that he, who every where maintains that character is the chief object of Comedy, should yet seem to draw conclusions directly opposite to these premises, and not only prefer Terence (whose artificial fables rendered him popular) to all other Comick Dramatists, but also rank the Step-Mother, merely on account of “the nice dependency and coherence of the fable,” higher in merit than any other of his pieces, confessedly more rich in character. I must own that, so far from being able to acquiesce in the opinion, that “it is, indifputably, to every reader of true taste, the most masterly and exquisite of the whole collection,” I am, in this instance, much rather inclined to say with Volcatius, Sumetur Hecyra sexta ex ijs fabula.

“The last, and least in merit of the six.”

Mons. Diderot, so often mentioned in these notes, has given us two excellent serious Comedies, Le Fils Naturel, and Le Père de Famille: in the conduct of the first, if I am not deceived, he seems to have kept his eye on the Step-Mother, and in the second on The Brothers; and, in my opinion, he has gone as far beyond Terence in the Fils Naturel, as he has fallen short of him in the Père de Famille.

Phormio .

P H O R M I O.

3 U

P H O R M I O.

Acted at the ROMAN SPORTS, *

L. Postumius Albinus, and L. Cornelius Merula, Curule
Ædiles: Principal Actors L. Ambivius Turpio and L.
Attilius Prænestinus: The Musick, composed for Unequal Flutes, by Flaccus, Freedman to Claudius: Taken entirely from the Epidicazomenos of Apollodorus: † Acted four times, C. Fannius, and M. Valerius, Consuls.

Year of Rome - - 592

Before Christ + - 159

* Acted at the Roman Sports.] Donatus says
“ At the Megalesian Games:” but he is certainly wrong. For this Comedy was played after the Eunuch had been brought on the stage, though in the very same year; it could not consequently be at the same festival on which the Eunuch was played, but some succeeding one. The Megalesian Games happened in April, and the Roman Sports in the month of September. DACIER.

† Acted four times.] FACTA QUARTO.
The words quarto and quartum have afforded matter of much dispute. When Pompey was just about to consecrate the Temple of Victory, a difficulty arose how he should express his third Consulship? whether it ought to be Consul tertio, or Consul tertium? The learned men of Rome were divided in their opinions about it, and even Cicero left the question undecided; for in order to satisfy all parties, he directed it should be thus abbreviated,

Consul tert. Facta quarto here can mean nothing else but that the Phormio was acted four times in one year, to distinguish its merit; and not, as Donatus interprets, that it was Terence’s fourth play in order of Composition. DACIER.

T O

DAVID GARRICK, Esq;

THE FOLLOWING COMEDY,

TRANSLATED FROM TERENCE,

IS INSCRIBED

BY HIS MOST FAITHFUL

AND AFFECTIONATE

HUMBLE SERVANT,

GEORGE COLMAN.

P E R S O N S.

PROLOGUE.

DEMIPHŌ.

CHREMES.

ANTIPHŌ.

PHÆDRIA.

CRATINUS.

CRITO.

HEGIO.

PHORMIO.

DORIO.

GETA.

DAVUS, and other Servants.

NAUSISTRATA.

SOPHRONA.

SCENE, ATHENS.

P R O L O G U E.

T H E Old Bard* finding it impossible
 To draw our Poet from the love of verse,
 And bury him in indolence, attempts
 By calumny to scare him from the stage;
 Pretending, that in all his former plays
 The characters are low, and mean the stile; †

Because

* The old Bard.] Lucius Lavinius, the same mentioned in former prologues.

† The characters are low, and mean the stile.] Tenui esse oratione, & scripturâ levi. The Poet here shews the want of judgement in the censures of the Critick, who objects to him as a fault, what ought to be the chief excellence of comick stile. It is true indeed that Terence was in this instance held inferior to Menander; and condemned for using less sublime language than his original: from which censure he here endeavours to vindicate himself by saying, that such a raised stile rather belonged to the province of Tragedy. DONATUS.

The opinion of Donatus on this passage is pretty clear from the above note: yet this line has created much dispute among commentators. The learned author of the Notes on the Art of Poetry almost directly contradicts Donatus, and says, “The sense of this passage is not, as commentators have idly thought, that his style was low and trifling, for this could never be pretended, but that his dialogue was inspid, and his characters, and in general his whole composition,

“WITHOUT THAT COMICK HEIGHTEN-
 “ING, which their vitiated tastes required.” Whoever consults the whole context, I think, must accede to the interpretation of Donatus, rather than that of the Annotator upon Horace. The objection of Lavinius to the plays of Terence was not, that they were without that comick heightening, &c. but, that the Poet did not aspire to the Tragick Sublime. The next line puts it beyond doubt. Because he ne’er described, &c. all which circumstances, says Donatus, are tragical, and would be vicious in Comedy.

In a note to the prologue to the Andrian on the lines

*Non ita dissimili sunt argumento, sed tamen
 Dissimili oratione sunt factæ, ac stilo.*

Donatus gives this explanation. Orationem in sentiis dicunt esse, stilum in verbis, argumentum in rebus.—“Oratio refers to the “sentiments, stilus to the diction, and argumentum to the plot.” Agreeable to this interpretation I rendered that passage

————— In argument
 Less different, than in sentiment, and stile.

But

P R O L O G U E.

Because he ne'er describ'd a mad-brain'd youth,*
 Who in his fits of phrenzy thought he saw
 A Hind, the dogs in full cry after her;
 Her too imploring and beseeching him
 To give her aid.---But did he understand,
 That when the piece was first produc'd, it ow'd,
 More to the Actor, than himself, its safety,
 He would not be thus bold to give offence.
 ---But if there's any one that says, or thinks,
 " That had not the Old Bard assail'd him first,
 " Our Poet could not have devis'd a Prologue,
 " Having no matter for abuse ;"---let such Receive for answer, " that altho' the prize
 " To all advent'urers is held out in common,
 " The Veteran Poet meant to drive our Bard
 " From study into want: He therefore chose
 " To answer, though he would not first offend.
 " And had his adversary but have prov'd
 " A generous rival, he had had due praise;

But here the instance immediately sub-joined seeming to point out the word Oratione as referring to Character, as Scriptura relates to the language, I have translated the verse according to that idea.

* A mad-brain'd youth.] This verse illustrates the foregoing; for here the Poet gives us a specimen of his rival's genius and taste.

He was fond of introducing characters extravagant, unnatural, and overstrained: hence the language must be of a piece, impetuous, turbulent, full of rant and affectation. No wonder, therefore, if he could not relish the compositions of our poet, whose characters are drawn from nature, and the language suitably artless and simple. PATRICK.

P R O L O G U E.

“ Let him then bear these censures, and reflect,

“ Of his own flanders 'tis the due return.

“ But henceforth I shall cease to speak of him,

“ Altho' he ceases not himself to rail.”

But now what I'd request of you, attend!
To-day I bring a new Play, which the Greeks
Call Epidicazomenos; * the Latins,
From the chief character, name Phormio:
Phormio, whom you will find a Parasite,
And the chief engine of the plot.---And now,
If to our Poet you are well inclin'd,
Give ear; be favourable; and be silent!
Let us not meet the same ill fortune now, †
That we before encounter'd, when our troop
Was by a tumult driven from their place;
To which the Actor's merit, seconded
By your good-will and candour, has restor'd us.

* Epidicazomenos.] A Greek word, [Επιδι-καζομενος] signifying a person who demands justice of another; meaning Phormio, who is the Plaintiff in the Law-suit, which is the ground of the intrigue in this pleasant comedy.

† The same ill fortune now, &c.] Alluding, as is generally supposed, to the disturbances on the first attempts to represent The Step-Mother.

P H O R M I O.

A C T I. S C E N E I.

DAVUS alone. *

G E T A, my worthy friend and countryman, †
Came to me yesterday: For some time past
I've ow'd him some small balance of account:
This, he desir'd, I wou'd make up: I have;

3 X 2

And

* Davus alone.] Terence here follows the same method, that he pursues in some other of his Comedies, of introducing a Protatick Personage, that is, a character foreign to the fable; that, while the story is opened to him, the audience may be informed of as much as is necessary for them to know. But although this scene is introduced merely for the instruction of the spectator, yet the Poet has contrived to season it with a great deal of wit and humour; and indeed that is the highest pitch of dramatick art, to seem to intend nothing but the amusement of the Spectator, and to carry on the plot, while you are actually endeavouring to prepare them for the incidents that are to follow.

DONATUS.

I have already more than once delivered my opinion concerning the Protatick Personage. The scene before us is indeed most exquisitely beautiful, and so admirable a model of Narration, that it gives one pain to make the slightest objection to it. But I cannot help thinking that the Trinummus of Plautus, a comedy which has some similitude to this of our author, is opened with more art and vivacity. Davus is rather idly introduced, brings money to no end, and hears the story to no purpose. In the Andrian, Simo has some sort of excuse for opening the mystery of his conduct to Sofia, as he belongs to the family, and it was proposed to make use of his assistance. But Davus has so very little relation to the parties concerned, that we do not know whose servant he is; nor does he take any part in the succeeding events. In the Trinummus, on the contrary, an old gentleman, who thinks the conduct of his friend reprehensible, comes to chide him for his behaviour; and the person accused, in his own vindication, explains himself at once to his angry monitor and to the spectators. This character also is not merely introduced as a Protatick Personage, but acts afterwards in concert with his friend.

† Geta, my worthy friend, and countryman.] Amicus summus meus & popularis Geta. Popularis properly signifies one of the same town; and though

And brought it with me : For his master's Son,
 I am inform'd, has lately got a wife :
 So I suppose this sum is scrap'd together
 For a Bride-Gift. Alack, how hard it is,
 That he, who is already poor, should still
 Throw in his mite, to swell the rich man's heap !
 * What He scarce, ounce by ounce, from short allowance,
 Sorely defrauding his own appetite, †
 Has spar'd, poor wretch ! shall She sweep all at once, Unheeding with what labour it was got.
 Geta, moreover, shall be struck for more ; ‡
 Another gift, when Madam's brought to bed ;---
 Another too, when Master's Birth-day's kept,
 And they initiate him. §---All this Mama though not born in it, a person who has been registered with the inhabitants. The very names Davus and Geta plainly prove they could not be countrymen in the strict sense and meaning of that word. DACIER.

* What he scarce, ounce by ounce, &c.] Quod ille unciatim, &c. These verses are extremely fine and elaborate, and make an exact climax, almost every word, as Donatus has observed, having a considerable emphasis and energy ; the touches are strong, forcible, and natural.—The images of poverty and distress are greatly heightened by the contrast which immediately follows. DACIER.

† From short allowance.] E demensio suo. Demensum was a measure of corn containing, as is commonly supposed, four bushels, which was delivered out to the slaves monthly, as their allowance. DONATUS.

‡ Shall be STRUCK for more.] FERIETUR alio munere. Here the familiar Latin phrase exactly answers to the English one.

§ And they initiate him.] Alluding to the custom of Initiation among the antients, of which there were several kinds. Madam Dacier supposes it to signify their being initiated in the grand mysteries of Ceres, which was commonly done, while they were yet very young. PATRICK.

Shall carry off, the Bantling her excuse.
But is that Geta?

S C E N E II.

Enter G E T A.

Get. at entering.] If a red-hair'd man
Enquire for me——

Dav. No more! he's here.

Get. Oh, Davus!

The very man that I was going after.

Dav. Here, take this! [gives a purse.] 'tis all told: you'll find it right;

The sum I ow'd you.

Get. Honest, worthy Davus!

I thank you for your punctuality.

Dav. And well you may, as men and times go now:
Things, by my troth, are come to such a pass,
If a man pays you what he owes, you're much
Beholden to him.—But, pray, why so sad?

Get. I?—You can scarce imagine in what dread,
What danger I am in.

Dav. How so?

Get. I'll tell you,

So you will keep it secret.

Dav. Away, fool!

The man, whose faith in money you have tried,
D'ye fear to trust with words?—And to what end
Shou'd I deceive you?

Get. Lift then!

Dav. I'm all ear.

Get. D'ye know our old man's elder brother, Chremes?

Dav. Know him? ay fure.

Get. You do?—And his son Phædria?

Dav. As well as I know you.

Get. It so fell out,

Both the old men were forc'd to journey forth
At the same season. He to Lemnos, our's
Into Cilicia, to an old acquaintance
Who had decoy'd the old curmudgeon thither
By wheedling letters, almost promising
Mountains of gold.

Dav. To one that had so much,
More than enough already?

Get. Prithee, peace!
Money's his passion.

Dav. Oh, would I had been
A man of fortune, I!

Get.

Get. At their departure,
The two old gentlemen appointed me
A kind of governor to both their sons.

Dav. A hard task, Geta!

Get. Troth, I found it so.
My angry Genius for my sins ordain'd it.*
At first I took upon me to oppose:
In short, while I was trusty to th' old man,
The young one made my shoulders answer for it.

Dav. So I suppose: for what a foolish task
To kick against the pricks! †

Get. I then resolv'd
To give them their own way in ev'ry thing.

Dav. Ay, then you made your market. ‡

Get. Our young spark
Play'd no mad pranks at first: But Phædria
Got him immediately a Musick-Girl:
Fond of her to distraction! She belong'd

* My angry Genius for my sins ordain'd it.] The Antients had a persuasion, that each man had a Genius or Guardian Deity, and that when he fell into any misfortune, or was guilty of any crime, it was because his Genius had abandoned him. PATRICK.

† To kick against the pricks.] Adversum stimulum calces. To kick against the pricks.—Originally an old Greek proverb, Προς τὰ νεῦρα λαμπιζειν.—προς νεῦρα κωλον εντενειν.—

So our SAVIOUR (Acts, chap. ix. v. 5.) it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

WESTERHOVIUS.

‡ Made your market.] Scisti uti foro. An allusion to merchants, who fix the price of commodities in proportion to the demand there is for them. DONATUS.

To a most avaricious fordid pimp;
 Nor had we aught to give;—th' old gentlemen
 Had taken care of That. Nought else remain'd,
 Except to feed his eyes, to follow her,
 To lead her out to school,* and hand her home.
 We too, for lack of other business, gave
 Our time to Phædria. Opposite the school,
 Whither she went to take her lessons, stood
 † A Barber's shop, wherein most commonly
 We waited her return. Hither one day
 Came a young man in tears:‡ we were amaz'd,
 And ask'd the cause. Never (said he, and wept)
 Did I suppose the weight of poverty
 A load so sad, so insupportable,
 As it appear'd but now.—I saw but now,
 Not far from hence, a miserable virgin
 Lamenting her dead mother.§ Near the corpse

She

* To lead her out to school.] Musick-schools, where the Slave-merchants sent their Girls to attain accomplishments, which might enhance their price. COOKE.

† A Barber's shop.] Barbers shops in Athens and Rome were places of publick resort for conversation, much of the nature of our Coffee-houses. PATRICK.

‡ Came a young man in tears.] In Apollodorus this young man is no other than the Barber himself, who was just returned from cutting off the young woman's hair, which was one of the usual ceremonies of mourning among the Greeks. This circumstance Terence has judiciously altered, that he might not shock the Roman spectators with manners so very foreign to their own.

DONATUS.

§ Lamenting her dead mother.] The Poet has managed this part of the Narration with so much address, that we are not so much affected

She fat; nor friend, nor kindred, nor acquaintance,
 Except one poor old woman, was there near
 To aid the funeral. I pitied her:
 Her beauty too was exquisite.—In short
 He mov'd us all: And Antipho at once
 Cried, “ Shall we go and visit her?”---“ Why, ay,
 “ I think so,” said the other, “ let us go!”
 “ Conduct us, if you please.”---We went, arriv'd,
 And saw her.---Beautiful she was indeed!
 More justly to be reckon'd so, for she
 Had no additions to set off her beauty.
 Her hair dishevell'd, barefoot, woe-be-gone,
 In tears, and miserably clad: that if
 The life and soul of beauty had not dwelt
 Within her very form, all these together
 Must have extinguish'd it.---The spark, possess'd
 Already with the Musick-Girl, just cried,
 “ She's well enough.”---But our young gentleman---
Don. Fell, I suppose, in love.
Get. In love indeed.

But mark the end! Next day, away he goes
 To the old woman strait, beseeching her
 To let him have the girl:---“ Not she indeed!

the death of the mother, as at the distress of the beautiful virgin: especially as we find in the catastrophe, that the death of this woman gives the poet a better opportunity of establishing the general happiness. DONATUS.

“ Nor was it like a gentleman, she said,
 “ For him to think on’t: She’s a citizen,
 “ An honest girl, and born of honest parents:---
 “ If he wou’d marry her indeed, by law
 “ He might do that; on no account, aught else.”
 ---Our spark, distracted, knew not what to do:
 At once he long’d to marry her, at once
 Dreaded his absent father.

Dav. Wou’d not He,
 Had he return’d, have giv’n consent?

Get. To wed
 A girl of neither family nor fortune?
 Never.

Dav. What then?

Get. What then! There is a Parasite,
 One Phormio, a bold enterprising fellow,
 Who—all the Gods confound him!---

Dav. What did He?

Get. Gave us the following counsel.---“ There’s a law
 “ That Orphan Girls shou’d wed their next of kin,
 “ Which law obliges too their next of kin
 “ To marry them.---I’ll say, that you’re her kinsman,
 “ And sue a writ against you. I’ll pretend
 “ To be her father’s friend, and bring the cause

“ Before

“ Before the judges. Who her father was,
“ Her mother who, and how she's your relation,
“ All this sham evidence I'll forge; by which
“ The cause will turn entirely in my favour.
“ You shall disprove no tittle of the charge;
“ So I succeed.---Your father will return;
“ Prosecute Me;---what then?---The Girl's our own.”

Dav. A pleasant piece of impudence!

Get. It pleas'd

Our spark at least: He put it into practice;
Came into court; and he was cast; and married.

Dav. How say you?

Get. Just as you have heard.

Dav. Oh Geta,

What will become of you?

Get. I don't know, faith.

But only this I know, whate'er chance brings,
I'll patiently endure.

Dav. Why, that's well said,
And like a man.

Get. All my dependance is Upon myself.

Dav. And that's the best.

Get. I might

Beg one indeed to intercede for me,
 Who may plead thus---“Nay, pardon him this once!
 “But if he fails again, I’ve not a word
 “To say for him.”---And well if he don’t add,
 “When I go hence, e’en hang him!”

Dav. What of him,
 Gentleman-Usher to the Mufick-Girl? *
 How goes He on?

Get. So, fo!

Dav. He has not much
 To give perhaps.

Get. Just nothing, but mere hope.

Dav. His father too, is he returned?

Get. Not yet.

Dav. And your old man, when do you look for Him?

Get. I don’t know certainly: but I have heard
 That there’s a letter from him come to port,
 Which I am going for.

Dav. Wou’d you aught else
 With me, good Geta?

* Gentleman-Usher to the Mufick Girl.] Quid Pædagogus ille. The servants who attended children to and from school were by the Greeks called Pedagogues. Socrates was satirically called the Pedagogue of Alcibiades: and Davus humourously applies this name to Phædria, who, as Geta had told him, attended the Girl to and from the Mufick-school.

DACIER.

Get. Nothing, but Farewell! [Exit Davus.
 Ho, Boy! what, nobody at home! [Enter Boy.] Take this,
 And give it Dorcium. * [Gives the Purse, and Exit.

S C E N E III.

A N T I P H O, P H Æ D R I A.

Ant. Is it come to this?
 My father, Phædria!—my best friend!—That I
 Shou'd tremble, when I think of his return!
 When, had I not been inconfiderate,
 I, as 'tis meet, might have expected him.

Phæ. What now?

Ant. Is that a question? And from You,
 Who know th' atrocious fault I have committed?
 Oh, that it ne'er had enter'd Phormio's mind
 To give such counsel! nor to urge me on,
 In the extravagance of blind desire,
 To this rash act, the source of my misfortunes!
 I shou'd not have possess'd her: that indeed
 Had made me wretched some few days.—But then

* And give it Dorcium.] Da hoc Dorcio.—Dorcio from Dorcium, the name of a woman, as Planesium, Glycerium. DONATUS.

This constant anguish had not torn my mind.—

Phæ. I hear you.

Ant. —while each moment I expect
His coming to divorce me.

Phæ. Other men,
For lack of what they love, are miserable;
Abundance is your grievance. You're too rich
A lover, Antipho! For your condition
Is to be wish'd and pray'd for. Now, by heaven,
Might I, so long as you have done, enjoy
My love, it were bought cheaply with my life.
How hard my lot, unsatisfied, unblest!
How happy your's, in full possession!—One
Of lib'ral birth, ingenuous disposition,
And honest fame, without expence, you've got:
The wife, whom you desir'd!—in all things blest,
But want the disposition to believe so.
Had you, like me, a scoundrel-pimp to deal with,
Then you'd perceive---But sure 'tis in our nature,
Never to be contented.

Ant. Now to Me,
Phædria, 'tis You appear the happy man.
Still quite at large, free to confider still,
To keep, pursue, or quit her: I, alas,

Have so entangled and perplext myself,
 That I can neither keep, nor let her go.
 —What now? isn't that our Geta, whom I see Running this way?---'Tis he himself---Ah me!
 How do I fear what news he brings!

S C E N E IV.

Enter at a distance G E T A running.

Get. Confusion!

A quick thought, Geta, or you're quite undone,
 So many evils take you unprepar'd;
 Which I know neither how to shun, nor how
 To extricate myself: for this bold stroke
 Of our's can't long be hid.

Ant. What's this confusion?

Get. Then I have scarce a moment's time to think.
 My master is arriv'd.

Ant. What mischief's that?

Get. Who, when he shall have heard it, by what art
 Shall I appease his anger?---Shall I speak?
 'Twill irritate him.---Hold my peace?---enrage him.---

Defend

Defend myself?---Impossible!*---Oh, wretch!
 Now for myself in pain, now Antipho
 Distracts my mind.---But him I pity most;
 For him I fear; 'tis he retains me here:
 For, were it not for him, I'd soon provide
 For my own safety---ay, and be reveng'd
 On the old greybeard---carry something off,
 And shew my master a light pair of heels.

Ant. What scheme to rob and run away is this?

Get. But where shall I find Antipho? where seek him?

Phæ. He mentions you.

Ant. I know not what, but doubt
 That he's the messenger of some ill news.

Phæ. Have you your wits?

Get. I'll home: he's chiefly there.

Phæ. Let's call him back!

Ant. Holo, you! stop!

Get. Heyday!

Authority enough, be who you will.

Ant. Geta!

Get. turning.] The very man I wish'd to meet!

* Defend myself? Impossible!] Purgem me?
Laterem lavem.---Laterem lavare, "to wash

"a brick," was a proverb, signifying to labour in vain.

Ant. Tell us, what news?---in one word, if you can.

Get. I'll do it.

Ant. Speak!

Get. This moment at the Port——

Ant. My father?

Get. Even so.

Ant. Undone!

Phæ. Heyday!

Ant. What shall I do?

Phæ. What say you? [to Geta.

Get. That I've seen
His father, Sir,---your Uncle.

Ant. How shall I,
Wretch that I am! oppose this sudden evil?
Shou'd I be so unhappy, to be torn
From thee, my Phanium, life's not worth my care.

Get. Since that's the case then, Antipho, you ought To be the more upon your guard.

Ant. Alas!
I'm not myself.

Get. But now you shou'd be most so, Antipho.
For if your father shou'd discern your fear,
He'll think you conscious of a fault.

Phæ. That's true.

Ant. I cannot help it, nor seem otherwise.

Get. How wou'd you manage in worfe difficulties?

Ant. Since I'm not equal to bear this, to thofe
I fhould be more unequal.

Get. This is nothing.

Pooh, Phædria, let him go! why wafte our time?

I will be gone. [going.

Phæ. And I. [going.

Ant. Nay, prithee, ftay!

What if I fhould diffemble?---Will that do?

[endeavouring to affume another air.

Get. Ridiculous!

Ant. Nay, look at me! Will That Suffice?

Get. Not it.

Ant. Or this?

Get. Almost.

Ant. Or this?

Get. Ay! now you've hit it. Do but ftick to that;
Answer him boldly; give him hit for dafh,
Nor let him bear you down with angry words.

Ant. I underftand you.

Get. "Forc'd"---"againft your will"---
"By law"---"by fentence of the court"---d'ye take me?

---But

it what old gentleman is that, I see
 'other end o'th' street?

It. 'Tis he himself.

re not face him. [going.

t. Ah, what is't you do?

re d'ye run, Antipho! Stay, stay, I say.

It. I know myself and my offence too well:

you then I commend my life and love. [Exit.

S C E N E V.

Manent P H Æ D R I A, and G E T A.

Phæ. Geta, what now?

t. You shall be roundly chid;

ndly drubb'd; or I am much deceiv'd.

it what e'en now we counsell'd Antipho,

ow behoves ourselves to practise, Phædria.

Phæ. Talk not of what behoves, but say at once you wou'd have me do.

t. Do you remember

plea, whereon you both agreed to rest,

our first vent'ring on this enterprize?

at Phormio's suit was just, sure, equitable, ot to be controverted."——

Phæ. I remember.

Get. Now then that plea! or, if it's possible,
One better or more plaufible.

Phæ. I'll do't.

Get. Do you attack him first! I'll lie in ambush,
To re-inforce you, if you give ground.

Phæ. Well. [they retire.]

S C E N E VI.

Enter DEMIPHIO at another part of the Stage.

Dem. How's this? A wife! what, Antipho! and ne'er
Ask my consent?---nor my authority---
Or, grant we pass authority, not dread
My wrath at least?---To have no sense of shame?
---Oh, impudence!---Oh, Geta, rare adviser!

Get. Geta at last.

Dem. What they will say to me,
Or what excuse they will devise, I wonder.

Get. Oh, we have settled that already: Think
Of something else.

Dem. Will he say this to me,
---“Against my will I did it”---Forc'd by law”---
---I hear you: I confess it.

Get. Very well.

Dem. But conscious of the fraud, without a word
In answer or defence, to yield the cause
Tamely to your opponents---did the law
Force you to that too?

Phæ. That's home.

Get. Give me leave!
I'll manage it.

Dem. I know not what to do :
This stroke has come so unawares upon me,
Beyond all expectation, past belief.
---I'm so enrag'd, I can't compose my mind
To think upon it.---Wherefore ev'ry man,*
When his affairs go on most swimmingly,
Ev'n then it most behoves to arm himself

* Wherefore ev'ry man, &c.] Quamobrem omnes, &c. This passage is quoted by Tully in the third book of his Tusculan Questions, and the maxim contained in these lines was a favourite principle among the Stoicks. But I cannot help thinking that the introduction of it in this place has commonly been considered too seriously; and I have scarce any doubt but that Terence intended it as a stroke of character. Commentators, in general, are never so happy as when they light upon a sentence in a classic author, which they can extol as a lesson of sound morality: but in dramatick writings we are not merely to confine ourselves to the consideration of what is said, but who says it. Donatus, in his preface to this play, says "that it is founded on passions almost too high for Comedy; but that the Poet contrives to temper every circumstance by his art." In the present instance, the old gentleman is indeed in a violent passion, but his anger is so managed throughout the scene, that it becomes truly comick: And Donatus very properly refers us to a similar passage in the Brothers, where Demea in like manner delivers moral precepts, which are in like manner turned into ridicule, and archly parodied by the impudent slave.

Against the coming storm: loss, danger, exile,
 Returning ever let him look to meet;
 His son in fault, wife dead, or daughter sick---
 All common accidents, and may have happen'd;
 That nothing shou'd seem new or strange. But if Aught has fall'n out beyond his hopes, all that Let him account clear gain.

Get. Oh, Phædria,

'Tis wonderful, how much a wiser man
 I am than my old master. My misfortunes
 I have consider'd well.---At his return
 Doom'd to grind ever in the mill, beat, chain'd,
 Or set to labour in the fields; of these
 Nothing will happen new. If aught falls out
 Beyond my hopes, all that I'll count clear gain.
 ---But why delay t'accost th' old gentleman,
 And speak him fair at first? [Phædria goes forward.]

Dem. Methinks I see

My nephew Phædria.

Phæ. My good Uncle, welcome!

Dem. Your servant!--But where's Antipho?

Phæ. I'm glad

To see you safe---

Dem. Well, well!--But answer me.

Phæ.

Phæ. He's well: hard 'by.---But have affairs turn'd out
According to your wishes?

Dem. Wou'd they had!

Phæ. Why, what's the matter?

Dem. What's the matter, Phædria?

You've clapp'd up a fine marriage in my absence.

Phæ. What! are you angry with him about That?

Get. Well counterfeited!

Dem. Shou'd I not be angry?

Let me but set eyes on him, he shall know
That his offences have converted me
From a mild father to a most severe one.

Phæ. He has done nothing, Uncle, to offend you.

Dem. See, all alike! the whole gang hangs together:
Know one, and you know all.

Phæ. Nay, 'tis not so.

Dem. One does a fault, the other's hard at hand
To bear him out: when t'other slips, he's ready:
Each in their turn!

Get. I'faith th' old gentleman
Has blunder'd on their humours to a hair.

Dem. If 'twere not so, you'd not defend him, Phædria.

Phæ. If, Uncle, Antipho has done a wrong
Or to his interest, or reputation,
I am content he suffer, as he may:

But

But if another, with malicious fraud,
Has laid a snare for inexperienced youth,
And triumph'd o'er it; can you lay the blame
On us, or on the judges, who oft take Thro' envy from the rich, or from compassion
Add to the poor?

Get. Unless I knew the cause,
I shou'd imagine this was truth he spoke.

Dem. What judge can know the merits on your side,
When you put in no plea; as he has done?

Phæ. He has behav'd like an ingenuous youth.
When he came into court, he wanted pow'r
To utter what he had prepar'd, so much
He was abash'd by fear and modesty.

Get. Oh brave!--But why, without more loss of time,
Don't I accost th' old man? [going up.] My master, welcome!
I am rejoic'd to see you safe return'd.

Dem. What! my good master Governor! your slave!
The prop! the pillar of our family!
To whom, at my departure hence, I gave
My son in charge.

Get. I've heard you for some time
Accuse us all quite undeservedly,
And me, of all, most undeservedly.

For what cou'd I have done in this affair?
A slave the laws will not allow to plead;
Nor can he be an evidence.

Dem. I grant it.

Nay more---the boy was bashful---I allow it.
---You but a slave.---But if she had been prov'd
Ever so plainly a relation, why
Needed he marry her? and why not rather
Give her, according to the law, a portion,*
And let her seek some other for a husband?
Why did he rather bring a beggar home?

Get. 'Twas not the thought, but money that was want-

Dem. He might have borrow'd it. [ing.

Get. Have borrow'd it!

Easily faid.

Dem. If not to be had else,
On interest.

Get. Nay, now indeed you've hit it.
Who wou'd advance him money in your life? †

Dem. Well, well, it shall not, and it cannot be,

4 A

That

* Give her, according to the law, a portion?
By this proposal Terence artfully prepares us for the imposition of Phormio, who ex-torts money from the old gentleman on this very foundation. DONATUS.

† Who wou'd advance him money in your life? Alexander ab Alexandro, Genial. Dier.

L. i. takes notice of an antient decree of Senate, derived to the Romans from a law of Solon, in which, in order to provide against young men borrowing money during the life of their fathers, it was ordained, that in case of non-payment, the lender should have no remedy at law. The mischief meant to be guarded against by this decree was,
that

That I shou'd suffer her to live with him
 As wife a single day. There is no cause.
 ---Wou'd I might see that fellow, or cou'd tell
 Where he resides!

Get. What, Phormio!

Dem. The girl's Patron. *

Get. He shall be with you strait.

Dem. Where's Antipho?

Phæ. Abroad.

Dem. Go, Phædria; find him, bring him here.

Phæ. I'll go directly. [Exit.

Get. aside.] Ay, to Pamphila. [Exit.

S C E N E VII.

D E M I P H O alone.

I'll home, and thank the Gods for my return; †
 Thence to the Forum, and convene some friends,
 Who may be present at this interview,
 That Phormio may not take me unprepar'd. [Exit.

that left the sons of rich men, being involved in debt, should be tempted to extricate themselves by dishonourable means, or even to hasten the death of a parent.

WESTERHOVIUS. PATRICK.

* The girl's Patron.] Istum Patronum mulieris. They who undertook to carry on a law-suit for another were called Patroni, Patrons.

† I'll home, and thank the Gods for my return.] It was the custom for those returning from a voyage or journey to give thanks in a formal manner to the Gods; even before they saw their wives or friends. And every citizen had at home Household Gods (usually called Penates, Domestici, or Lares) which he and his family worshipped in private, and considered as the particular guardians of the family. WESTERHOVIUS.

A C T II. S C E N E I.

P H O R M I O, G E T A.

*Phor. AND Antipho, you say, has flunk away,
Fearing his father's presence?

Get. Very true.

Phor. Poor Phanium left alone?

Get. 'Tis even so.

Phor. And the old gentleman enrag'd?

Get. Indeed.

Phor. The sum of all then, Phormio, rests on You:
On you, and you alone. You've bak'd this cake;
E'en eat it for your pains. About it then!

Get. I do beseech you.

Phor. to himself.] What if he enquire?---

Get. Our only hope's in You.

Phor. to himself.] I have it!---Then,
Suppose he offer to return the girl?---

* And Antipho, you say, &c.] It is said that this play being once rehearsed before Terence and some of his most intimate acquaintance, Ambivius, who acted the part of Phormio, came in drunk, which threw the author into a violent passion: but Ambivius had scarce repeated a few lines, stammering, and scratching his head, before Terence became pacified, declaring that when he was writing those very lines, he absolutely had just such a Parasite, as Ambivius then represented, in his thoughts. DONATUS.

Get. You urg'd us to it.

Phor. to himself.] Ay! it shall be so.

Get. Assist us!

Phor. Let him come, Old Gentleman!

'Tis here: it is engender'd: I am arm'd
With all my counsels.

Get. What d'ye mean to do?

Phor. What wou'd you have me do, unless contrive
That Phanium may remain, that Antipho
Be freed from blame, and all the old man's rage
Turn'd upon Me? *

Get. Brave fellow! friend indeed!

And yet I often tremble for you, Phormio,
Left all this noble confidence of your's
End in the stocks at last. †

Phor. Ah, 'tis not so.

I'm an old stager too, and know my road.
How many men d'ye think I've bastinadoed

* Turn'd upon me.] In this scene Terence exhibits the lower order of Parasites, who ingratiated themselves by Sharping and Roguery; as in the Eunuch he describes the Parasites of a higher rank, and of a newer species, who obtained their ends by Flattery.

DONATUS.

† End in the stocks at last.] In nervum erumpat denique. Several interpretations are given of these words. By some in nervum erumpere is supposed to allude to the drawing of a bow till the string break: but the phrase is more generally supposed in this place to imply some corporal punishment inflicted on malefactors. Quia sæpe in nervum coniciebantur, ex aliquo maleficio in carcerem missi, says Donatus. Westerhovius explains this passage thus. Est autem Nervus vinculi lignei genus, in quod pedes coniecti arctantur; which is a pretty exact description of the stocks.

Almost to death? Aliens, and Citizens?

The oftner, still the safer.---Tell me then,

Didst ever hear of actions for assault

And batt'ry brought against me?

Get. How comes that?

Phor. Because the net's not stretch'd to catch the hawk,
Or kite, who do us wrong; but laid for those,

Who do us none at all: In them there's profit,

In those mere labour lost. Thus other men

May be in danger, who have aught to lose;

I, the world knows, have nothing.---You will say,

* They'll seize my person.---No, they won't maintain

A fellow of my stomach.---And they're wise,

In my opinion, if for injuries

They'll not return the highest benefit.

Get. It is impossible for Antipho

To give you thanks sufficient.

Phor. Rather say,

No man sufficiently can thank his patron.

† You at free cost to come! anointed, bath'd,

Eafy

* They'll seize my person.] Ducent damnatum domum. Literally, they will lead me condemned home. For, as Donatus observes on this passage, Insolvent Debtors were by the Law made over as slaves to their Creditors.

† You at free cost, &c.] This passage is not taken from Apollodorus, but from the sixth book of the satires of Ennius.

Eafy and gay! while he's eat up with care
 And charge, to cater for your entertainment!
 He gnaws his heart, you laugh; eat firft, fit firft,
 And fee * a Doubtful Banquet plac'd before you!

Get. Doubtful! what phrafe is that?

Phor. Where you're in doubt,
 What you fhall rather chufe. Delights like thefe,
 When you but think how fweet, how dear, they are;
 Him that affords them muft you not fuppofe
 A very Deity?

Get. The old man's here.

Mind what you do! the firft attack's the fierceft:
 Sustain but that, the reft will be mere play. [they retire.

*Quippe sine curâ, lætus, lautus, cum advenis,
 Infertis malis, expedito brachio,
 Alacer, celfus, lupino expectans impetu,
 Mox dum alterius abligurias bona: quid
 Cenfes Dominis effe animi? prob divûm fides!
 Ille triftis cibum dum fervat, tu ridens voras.*

Gay, void of care, anointed when you come,
 With fmacking jaw, and arm prepar'd to carve,
 Keen, eager, and impatient as the Wolf,
 Expecting every moment to fall on,

And gorge yourfelf at his expence; what, think you,
 Poffeffes then the mafter's mind? Good heaven!
 He fits, and with a melancholy air
 Broods o'er the feaft, which laughing you devour.
 DONATUS.

* A Doubtful Banquet.] Cæna dubia. Phormio explains this expreffion himfelf. Horace, who takes frequent opportunities of imitating our author, has adopted this phrafe.

S C E N E II.

Enter at a distance DEMIPH O.—HEG I O, C R A T I N U S, C R I T O, following.

Dem. Was ever man so grossly treated, think ye?

---This way, Sirs, I beseech you.

Get. He's enrag'd!

Phor. Hift! mind your cue: I'll work him.

---[coming forward, and speaking loud.] Oh, ye Gods!

Does he deny that Phanium's his relation?

What, Demipho! Does Demipho deny

That Phanium is his kinfwoman?

Get. He does.

Phor. And who her father was, he does not know?

Get. No.

Dem. to the Lawyers.] Here's the very fellow, I believe,
Of whom I have been speaking.---Follow me!

Phor. aloud.] And that he does not know, who Stilpho was?

Get. No.

Phor. Ah! because, poor thing, she's left in want,
Her father is unknown, and she despis'd.

What will not avarice do?

Get.

Get. If you insinuate
My master's avaritious, woe be to you!

Dem. behind.] Oh impudence! he dares accuse me first.

Phor. As to the youth, I cannot take offence,
If he had not much knowledge of him; since,
Now in the vale of years, in want, his work
His livelihood, he nearly altogether
Liv'd in the country: where he held a farm
Under my father. I have often heard
The poor old man complain, that this his kinsman
Neglected him.---But what a man! A man
Of most exceeding virtue.

Get. Much at one:
Yourself and He you praise so much.

Phor. Away!
Had I not thought him what I've spoken of him,
I wou'd not for his daughter's sake have drawn
So many troubles on our family,
Whom this old cuff now treats so scandalously.

Get. What, still abuse my absent master, Rascal!

Phor. It is no more than he deserves.

Get. How, villain!

Dem. Geta! [calling.

Get.

Get. Rogue, Robber, Pettyfogger! [to Phormio, pretending not to hear Demipho.]

Dem. Geta!

Phor. Answer. [apart to Geta.

Get. turning.] Who's that?---Oh!

Dem. Peace!

Get. Behind your back

All day without cessation has this knave
Thrown scurvy terms upon you, such as none
But men, like him, can merit.

Dem. Well! have done:

[putting Geta by, then addressing Phormio.

Young man! permit me first to ask one question,
And, if you please, vouchsafe to answer me.
---Who was this friend of your's? Explain! and how Might he pretend that I was his relation?

Phor. So! you fish for't, as if you didn't know.

[sneeringly.

Dem. Know! I!

Phor. Ay; you.

Dem. Not I: You, that maintain
I ought, instruct me how to recollect.

Phor. What! not acquainted with your cousin?

Dem. Plague!

Tell me his name.

Phor. His name? ay!

Dem. Well, why don't you?

Phor. Confusion! I've forgot the name. * [apart.

Dem. What say you?

Phor. Geta, if you remember, prompt me.

[apart to Geta.]——Pshaw!

I will not tell.—As if you didn't know,

You're come to try me. [loud to Demipho.

Dem. How! I try you?

Get. Stilpho. [whispering Phormio.

Phor. What is't to me?---Stilpho.

Dem. Whom say you?

Phor. Stilpho:

Did you know Stilpho, Sir?

Dem. I neither know him;

Nor ever had I kinsman of that name.

Phor. How! are you not ashamed?---But if, poor man,
Stilpho had left behind him an estate
Of some ten Talents——

Dem. Out upon You!

Phor. Then

* I've forgot the name.] In the Trinummus of Plautus, where a sharper is employed, like Phormio, to carry on an imposture, He in like manner forgets the name of the person from whom he pretends to come; and what renders the circumstance still more pleasant is, that he happens to be engaged in conversation with the very person himself. The Trinummus, taken all together, is, I think, inferior to this play of our author; but there are in it some scenes of uncommon pleasantry.

You would have been the first to trace your line
Quite from your Grandfire and Great Grandfire.

Dem. True.

Had I then come, I'd have explain'd at large
How she was my relation : So do You !

Say, how is she my kinswoman ?

Get. Well said !

Master, you're right.---Take heed ! [apart to Phormio.

Phor. I have explain'd

All that most clearly, where I ought, in court.

If it were false, why did not then your son

Refute it ?

Dem. Do you tell me of my son ?

Whose folly can't be spoke of, as it ought.

Phor. But You, who are so wise, go, seek the judge :

Ask sentence in the self-same cause again :

* Because You're Lord alone ; and have alone

Pow'r to obtain the judgement of the court

Twice in one cause.

Dem. Although I have been wrong'd,

Yet, rather than engage in litigation,

And rather than hear You ; as if she were

* Because You're Lord alone.] Quandoquidem solus regnas. An invidious sneer ; because in Athens, where the people were tenacious of liberty and the laws, arbitrary acts were particularly odious. Thus Sannio in the Brothers ; Regnumne, Æschine, hic tu possides ? " Do you reign King here, Æschinus ?"

DONATUS.

Indeed related to us, as the law
Ordains, I'll pay her dowry: Take her hence,
And with her take five Minæ.

Phor. Ha! ha! ha!

A pleasant gentleman!

Dem. Why, what's the matter?
Have I demanded any thing unjust?
Sha'n't I obtain this neither, which is law?

Phor. Is't even so, Sir?---Like a common harlot
When you've abus'd her, does the law ordain
That you shou'd pay her hire, and whistle her off?
Or, left a citizen thro' poverty
Bring shame upon her honour, does it order
That she be given to her next of kin
To pass her life with him? which you forbid.

Dem. Ay; to her next of kin: But why to Us;
Or wherefore?

Phor. Oh! that matter is all settled:
Think on't no more.

Dem. Not think on't! I shall think
Of nothing else, till there's an end of this.

Phor. Words, words!

Dem. I'll make them good.

Phor. But, after all,
With You I have no business, Demipho!

Your Son is cast, not You: for at your age
The coupling-time is over.

Dem. Be assur'd
That all I've said, He says: Or I'll forbid
Him and this wife of his my house.

Get. He's angry. [apart.

Phor. No; you'll think better on't.

Dem. Are you resolv'd,
Wretch that you are, to thwart me ev'ry way?

Phor. He fears, tho' he dissembles.

Get. Well begun! } apart.

Phor. Well; but what can't be cur'd must be endur'd:
'Twere well, and like yourself, that we were friends.

Dem. I! friend to you? or chuse to see, or hear you!

Phor. Do but agree with her, you'll have a girl
To comfort your old age. Your years, consider!

Dem. Plague on your comfort! take her to yourself!

Phor. Ah! don't be angry!

Dem. One word more, I've done.
See that you fetch away this wench, and soon,
Or I shall turn her headlong out o'doors.
So much for Phormio!

Phor. Offer but to touch her,
In any other manner than beseems

A gentlewoman and a citizen,
 And I shall bring a swinging writ against you.
 So much for Demipho!—If I am wanted,
 I am at home, d'ye hear? [apart to Geta.
Get. I understand. [apart.] [Exit Phormio.

S C E N E III.

Dem. With how much care, and what sollicitude,
 My son affects me, with this wretched match
 Having embroil'd himself and me! nor comes Into my fight, that I might know at least
 Or what he says, or thinks of this affair.
 Go, you; and see if he's come home, or no.

Get. I'm gone. [Exit.

Dem. You see, Sirs, how this matter stands.
 What shall I do? Say, Hegio!

Heg. Meaning me?
 Cratinus, please you, thou'd speak first.

Dem. Say then,
 Cratinus!

Cra. Me d'ye question?

Dem. You.

Cra. Then I,

Whatever steps are best I'd have you take.
 Thus it appears to Me. Whate'er your son
 Has in your absence done, is null and void
 In law and equity.—And so you'll find.
 That's my opinion.

Dem. Say now, Hegio?

Heg. He has, I think, pronounc'd most learnedly.
 But so 'tis: many men, and many minds!
 Each has his fancy: Now, in my opinion,
 Whate'er is done by law, can't be undone.
 'Tis shameful to attempt it.

Dem. Say you, Crito!

Cri. The case, I think, asks more deliberation.
 'Tis a nice point.

Heg. Wou'd you aught else with us?

Dem. You've utter'd Oracles. [Exeunt Lawyers.] I'm more uncertain

Now than I was before.*

* I'm more uncertain now than I was before.]
 I believe there is no scene of Comedy more highly seasoned with the Ridiculous than this before us. The idea is truly comick, and it is worked up with all that simplicity and chastity, so peculiar to the manner of Terence. An ordinary writer would have indulg'd himself in twenty little conceits on this occasion; but the dry gravity of Terence infinitely surpasses, as true humour, all the drolleries, which perhaps even those great Masters of Comedy, Plautus or Moliere, might have been tempted to throw out.

 It is the highest art of a Dramatick Author on some occasions to leave a good deal to the Actor: it has been remarked by Heinſius and others, that Terence was particularly attentive to this circumstance; and Donatus in his preface to this Comedy says, that it is tota diverbiis facetissimis, & gestum desideranti-bus scenicum.

Re-enter

Re-enter G E T A.

Get. He's not return'd.

Dem. My Brother, as I hope, will soon arrive :
Whate'er advice he gives me, that I'll follow.
I'll to the Port, and ask when they expect him. [Exit.

Get. And I'll go find out Antipho, and tell him
All that has past.—But here he comes in time. *

S C E N E IV.

Enter at a distance A N T I P H O.

Ant. to himself.] Indeed, indeed, my Antipho,
You're much to blame, to be so poor in spirit.
What! steal away so guilty-like? and trust
Your life and safety to the care of others?

* But here he comes in time.] Sed eccum ipsum video in tempore huc se recipere. Here in all the common books ends the second act; and the scenes that make up the residue of it here, in them compose the third. Madam Dacier saw the absurdity, but follows the old division, arbitrarily omitting the above line, in order to break the palpable continuity of the scenes; and make the stage appear to be vacant. But the line in question is in all the copies: nor is it likely that in so busy a play, the Author would have devoted a whole act to the Episode of Phædrus and his Muffet-Girl. The division of the acts in this play is so extremely confused in all the books I have seen, that I have varied from them all. I have endeavoured to find out the natural rests or pauses in the action, and to divide the acts in such a manner, as to assign a particular business to each. See the first note to Act V.

Would

Would They be touch'd more nearly than Yourself?
 Come what come might of ev'ry thing beside,
 Could you abandon the dear maid at home?
 Could you so far deceive her easy faith,
 And leave her to misfortune and distress?
 Her, who plac'd all her hopes in you alone?

Get. coming forwards.] I'faith, Sir, we have thought you much to blame

For your long absence.—

Ant. You're the very man
 That I was looking for.

Get. —But ne'ertheless
 We've mist no opportunity.

Ant. Oh, speak!
 How go my fortunes, Geta? has my father
 Any suspicion that I was in league
 With Phormio?

Get. Not a jot.

Ant. And may I hope?

Get. I don't know.

Ant. Ah!

Get. Unless that Phædria
 Did all he could do for you.—

Ant. Nothing new.

Get. —And Phormio, as on all occasions else,
Prov'd himself a brave fellow.

Ant. What did He?

Get. Out-swagger'd your hot father.

Ant. Well said, Phormio!

Get. ---I did the best I could too.

Ant. Honest Geta,
I am much bounden to you all.

Get. Thus, Sir,
Stand things at present. As yet all is calm.
Your father means to wait your uncle's coming.

Ant. For what?

Get. For his advice, as he propos'd;
By which he will be rul'd in this affair.

Ant. How do I dread my uncle's coming, Geta,
Since by his sentence I must live or die!

Get. But here comes Phædria.

Ant. Where?

Get. * From his old school. [they retire.]

* From his old school.] Ab sua palæstrâ.--- Palæstra was properly the School of Gym-nastick Exercises for the Græcian youth.
Geta therefore, in allusion to that, pleasantly calls the Procurer's house the palæstra of Phædria, much in the same vein of humour that he used in talking of him at the opening of the play.

S C E N E V.

Enter, from Dorio's, D O R I O, P H Æ D R I A following.

Phæ. Nay, hear me, Dorio!

Dorio. Not I.

Phæ. But a word!

Dorio. Let me alone.

Phæ. Pray, hear me!

Dorio. I am tir'd

With hearing the same thing a thousand times.

Phæ. But what I'd say, you would be glad to hear.

Dorio. Speak then! I hear.

Phæ. Can't I prevail on you

To stay but these three days?---Nay, where d'ye go?

Dorio. I should have wonder'd had you said aught new.

Ant. behind.] This Pimp, I fear, will work himself no

Get. I fear so too. [good. *

Phæ. Won't you believe me?

* This pimp, I fear, will work himself no good.] Metuo lenonem, nequid suo suat capiti. This passage has much puzzled the Commentators. I have followed Madam Dacier, though I do not think that her interpretation of the passage, or any other comment that I have seen, makes very good sense of it.

Dorio. Guefs.

Phæ. Upon my honour.

Dorio. Nonfenfe.

Phæ. 'Tis a kindnefs

Shall be repaid with intereft.

Dorio. Words, words!

Phæ. You'll be glad on't; you will, believe me.

Dorio. Pfhaw!

Phæ. Try; 'tis not long.

Dorio. You're in the fame tune ftill.

Phæ. My kinfman, parent, friend, ——

Dorio. Ay, talk away.

Phæ. Can you be fo inflexible, fo cruel,

That neither pity, nor entreaties touch you?

Dorio. And can You be fo inconfiderate,

And fo unconfcionable, Phædria,

To think that you can talk me to your purpofe,

And wheedle me to give the girl for nothing?

Ant. behind.] Poor Phædria!

Phæ. to himfelf.] Alas, he fpeaks the truth.

Get. to Ant.] How well they each fupport their characters!

Phæ. to himfelf.] Then that this evil fhould have come upon me,

When Antipho was in the like diftreff!

Ant.

Ant. going up.] Ha! what now, Phædria?

Phæ. Happy, happy Antipho!——

Ant. I?

Phæ. Who have her you love in your possession,
Nor e'er had plagues like these, to struggle with!

Ant. In my possession? yes, I have, indeed,
As the old saying goes, a Wolf by th' Ears: *
For I can neither part with her, nor keep her.

Dorio. 'Tis just my case with him.

Ant. to Dorio.] Thou thorough Bawd!

---to Phædria.] What has he done?

Phæ. Done?---The inhuman wretch
Has sold my Pamphila.

Get. What! Sold her?

Ant. Sold her?

Phæ. Yes; sold her.

Dorio, laughing.] Sold her.---What a monstrous crime!
A wench he paid his ready money for.

Phæ. I can't prevail upon him, to wait for me,
And to stave off his bargain but three days;
Till I obtain the money from my friends,

* I have a wolf by the ears.] Auribus teneo lupum. A proverb; the meaning of which is explained in the next line.

According to their promise.---If I do not Pay it you then, don't wait a moment longer.

Dorio. You ftun me.

Ant. 'Tis a very little time,
For which he afks your patience, Dorio.
Let him prevail on you; your complaifance
Shall be requited doubly.

Dorio. Words; mere words!

Ant. Can you then bear to fee your Pamphila
Torn from this city, Phædria?---Can you, Dorio,
Divide their loves?

Dorio. Nor I, nor you.

Get. Plague on you!

Dorio, to Phæ.] I have, againft my natural difpofition,
Born with you feveral months, ftill promifing,
Whimpering, and ne'er performing any thing:
Now, on the contrary, I've found a fpark,
Who'll prove a ready-paymafter, no fniveler:
Give place then to your betters!

Anti. Surely, Phædria,
There was, if I remember, a day fettled
That you fhould pay the money down.

Phæ. There was.

Dorio. Do I deny it?

Ant. Is the day past?

Dorio. No.

But this has come before it.

Ant. Infamous!

Ar'n't you asham'd of such base treachery?

Dorio. Not I, while I can get by't.

Get. Scavenger!

Phæ. Is this just dealing, Dorio?

Dorio. 'Tis my way:

So, if you like me, use me.

Ant. Can you deceive him thus?

Dorio. Nay, Antipho,

'Tis he deceives me: he was well aware

What kind of man I was, but I believ'd

Him diff'rent. He has disappointed me,

But I am still the same to him as ever.

However, thus much I can do for him;

The Captain promis'd to pay down the money

To-morrow morning. But now, Phædria,

If you come first, I'll follow my old rule,

"The first to pay, shall be first serv'd." Farewell. [Exit.

S C E N E

S C E N E VI.

P H Æ D R I A, A N T I P H O, G E T A.

Phæ. What shall I do? Unhappy that I am,
 How shall I, who am almost worse than nothing,
 Raise such a sum so suddenly?---Alas!
 Had I prevail'd on him to wait three days,
 I had a promise of it.

Ant. Shall we, Geta,
 Suffer my Phædria to be miserable?
 My best friend Phædria, who but now, you said,
 Assisted me so heartily?---No.---Rather
 Let us, since there is need, return his kindness!

Get. It is but just, I must confess.

Ant. Come then;
 'Tis you alone can save him.

Get. By what means?

Ant. Procure the money.

Get. Willingly: but whence?

Ant. My father is arriv'd.

Get. He is: what then?

Ant. A word to the wife, Geta!

Get.

Get. Say you so?

Ant. Ev'n so.

Get. By Hercules, 'tis rare advice.

Are you there with me? will it not be triumph,
So I but scape a scouring for your match,
That you must urge me to run risks for him?

Ant. He speaks the truth, I must confess.

Phæ. How's that?

Am I a stranger to you, Geta?

Get. No:

Nor do I hold you such. But is it nothing,
That the old man now rages at us all,
Unless we irritate him so much further,
As to preclude all hopes to pacify him?

Phæ. Shall then another bear her hence? Ah me!
Now then, while I remain, speak to me, Antipho.
Behold me!

Ant. Wherefore? what is it you mean?

Phæ. Wherever she's convey'd, I'll follow her;
Or perish.

Get. Heaven prosper your designs!---
Gently, Sir, gently!

Ant. See, if you can help him.

Get. Help him! but how?

Ant. Nay, think, invent, devise;
Lest he do something we repent of, Geta!

Get. I'm thinking. [pausing.—Well then, I believe, he's
But I'm afraid of mischief. [safe.

Ant. Never fear:
We'll bear all good and evil fortune with you.

Get. Tell me the sum you have occasion for.

Phæ. But thirty Minæ.

Get. Thirty! monstrous, Phædria!
She's very dear.

Phæ. Dog-cheap.

Get. Well, say no more.
I'll get them for you.

Phæ. O brave fellow!

Get. Hence!

Phæ. But I shall want it now.

Get. You'll have it now.

But Phormio must assist me in this business.

Ant. He's ready: lay what load you will upon him,
He'll bear it all; for he's a friend indeed.

Get. Let's to him quickly then!*

Ant. D'ye want my help?

* Let's to him quickly then!] After this in some books is inserted a speech of Phædria; Abi, dic, præsto ut sit domi. "Go, tell him to be at home." But it confounds the sense in this place, and it is plain that Phædria and Geta go out together.

Get. We've no occasion for you. Get you home
To the poor girl, who's almost dead with fear;
And see you comfort her.---Away! d'ye loiter?

Ant. There's nothing I would do so willingly. [Exit.

Phæ. But how will you effect this?

Get. I'll explain
That matter as we go along.---Away! [Exeunt.

A C T III. S C E N E I.

Enter D E M I P H O and C H R E M E S.

Dem. WE L L, Chremes? have you brought your daughter with you,

On whose account you went to Lemnos?

Chre. No.

Dem. Why not?

Chre. It seems the mother, grown impatient,
Perceiving that I tarried here so long,
And that the girl's age brook'd not my delays,
Had journied here, they said, in search of me,
With her whole family.

Dem. Appriz'd of this,
What kept you there so long then?

Chre. A disease.

Dem. How came it? what disease?

Chre. Is that a question?

Old age itself is a disease.—However,
The master of the ship, who brought them over,
Inform'd me of their safe arrival hither.

Dem.

Dem. Have you heard, Chremes, of my son's misfortune
During my absence?

Chre. Ay; and it confounds me.
For to another should I tender her,
I must relate the girl's whole history,
And whence arises my connexion with her.
You I can trust as safely as myself:
But if a stranger courts alliance with me,
While we're new friends, he'll hold his peace perhaps,
But if he cools, he'll know too much of me.
Then I'm afraid my wife should know of this;
Which if she does, I've nothing else to do,
But shake myself, * and leave my house directly:
For I've no friend at home, except myself.

Dem. I know it; and 'tis that which touches me.
Nor are there any means I'll leave untried,
Till I have made my promise to you good.

* But shake myself, &c.] Ut me excutiam.
Alluding to the manners of the Greek and Eastern nations, who always shook their cloaths at the doors of the houses, that they abandoned. DACIER.

S C E N E II.

Enter, at another part of the Stage, G E T A.

Get. to himself.] I never saw a more shrewd rogue than Phormio.

I came to let him know, we wanted money,
With my device for getting it; and scarce
Had I related half, but he conceiv'd me.
He was o'erjoy'd; commended me; demanded
To meet with Demipho; and thank'd the Gods,
That it was now the time to shew himself
As truly Phædria's friend, as Antipho's.
I bad him wait us at the Forum; whither
I'd bring th' old gentleman.---And there he is!
---But who's the furthestmost? Ha! Phædria's father.
---Yet what was I afraid of, Simpleton?
That I have got two dupes instead of one?
Is it not better that my hopes are doubled?
---I'll attack him, I first propos'd. If He Answers my expectation, well: if not,
Why then have at you, Uncle!

S C E N E

S C E N E III.

Enter behind ANTIPHO.

Ant. to himself.] I expect
Geta's arrival presently.—But see!
Yonder's my Uncle with my father.---Ah!
How do I dread his influence!

Get. I'll to them.

Oh, good Sir Chremes! [going up.

Chre. Save you, fave you, Geta!

Get. I'm glad to see you safe arriv'd,

Chre. I thank you.

Get. How go affairs?

Chre. A world of changes here,
As usual at first coming home again.

Get. True. Have you heard of Antipho's affair?

Chre. The whole.

Get. to Demipho.] Did you inform him, Sir?---'Tis monstrous, Chremes,
To be so shamefully impos'd upon!

Dem. 'Twas on that point I was just talking with him.

Get.

Get. And I too, having turn'd it in my thoughts,
Have found, I think, a remedy.

Dem. How, Geta?

What remedy?

Get. On leaving you, by chance
I met with Phormio.

Chre. Who is Phormio?

Get. The girl's follicitor.

Chre. I understand.

Get. I thought within myself, "suppose I found him!"
And taking him aside, "Now prithee, Phormio,
"Why don't you try to settle this affair
"By fair means rather than by foul? said I.
"My master is a generous gentleman,
"And hates to go to law. For I assure you,
"His other friends advis'd him, to a man,
"To turn this girl directly out o'doors.

Ant. behind.] What does he mean? or where will all this end?

Get. "The law, you think, will give you damages,
"If he attempts to turn her out.---Alas,
"He has had counsel upon that.---I'faith,
"You'll have hot work, if you engage with Him;
"He's such an Orator!---But ev'n suppose
"That you should gain your law-suit, after all

“ The trial is not for his life, but money.”

Perceiving him a little wrought upon,

And soften'd by this stile of talking with him,

“ Come now,” continued I, “ we're all alone.

“ Tell me, what money would you take in hand

“ To drop your law-suit, take away the girl,

“ And trouble us no farther?”

Ant. behind.] Is he mad?

Get. ---“ For I am well convinc'd, that if your terms

“ Are not extravagant and wild indeed,

“ My master's such a worthy gentleman,

“ You will not change three words between you.”

Dem. Who

Commiffion'd you to fay all this?

Chre. Nay, nay,

Nothing could be more happy to effect

The point we labour at.

Ant. behind.] Undone!

Chre. to Get.] Go on.

Get. At first he rav'd.

Dem. Why, what did he demand?

Get. Too much: as much as came into his head.

Chre. Well, but the sum?

Get. He talk'd of a Great Talent.*

Dem. Plague on the rascal! what! has he no shame?

Get. The very thing I said to him.---“ Suppose
 “ He was to portion out an only daughter,
 “ What could he give her more?---He profits little,
 “ Having no daughter of his own; since one
 “ Is found, to carry off a fortune from him.”
 ---But to be brief, and not to dwell upon
 All his impertinencies, He at last Gave me this final answer.---“ From the first,
 “ I wish'd, said he, as was indeed most fit,
 “ To wed the daughter of my friend myself.
 “ For I was well aware of her misfortune;
 “ That, being poor, she would be rather given
 “ In slavery, than wedlock, to the rich.
 “ But I was forc'd, to tell you the plain truth,
 “ To take a woman with some little fortune,
 “ To pay my debts: and still, if Demipho
 “ Is willing to advance as large a sum,
 “ As I'm to have with one I'm now engag'd to,
 “ There is no wife I'd rather take than Her.”

* A Great Talent.] Talentum Magnum.
 Among the antient writers we meet sometimes with the word Talent simply; sometimes it is called A Great Talent; and sometimes an Attick Talent; which all import the same, when to be understood of Grecian money. PATRICK.

Ant. behind.] Whether through malice, or stupidity,
He is rank knave or fool, I cannot tell.

Dem. to Geta.] What, if he owes his soul?

Get. “ I have a farm,”

Continued he, “ that’s mortgag’d for Ten Minæ.”

Dem. Well, let him take her then : I’ll pay the money.

Get. “ A house for ten more.”

Dem. Huy ! huy ! that’s too much.

Chre. No noise ! demand those ten of me.

Get. “ My wife

“ Must buy a maid ; some little furniture

“ Is also requisite ; and some expence

“ To keep our wedding : all these articles,”

Continues he, “ we’ll reckon at Ten Minæ.”

Dem. No ; let him bring a thousand writs against me. *
I’ll give him nothing. What ! afford the villain
An opportunity to laugh at me ?

Chre. Nay, but be pacified ! I’ll pay the money.
Only do you prevail upon your son
To marry her, whom we desire.

* Let him bring a thousand writs, &c.] Sexcentas scribito jam mihi dicas. Donatus observes on this passage that Six Hundred was used by the Romans for an indefinite number, as Ten Thousand was among the Greeks ; wherefore Terence, according to the different genius of the two languages, renders the μυριας of Apollodorus by sexcentas. I have in like manner rendered the sexcentas of Terence by a Thousand, as being most agreeable to the English idiom.

Ant. behind.] Ah me!

Geta, your treachery has ruin'd me.

Cbre. She's put away on my account: 'tis just
That I should pay the money:

Geta. "Let me know,"

Continues he, "as soon as possible,

"Whether they mean to have me marry her;

"That I may part with t'other, and be certain.

"For t'other girl's relations have agreed

"To pay the portion down immediately."

Cbre. He shall be paid this too immediately.

Let him break off with her, and take this girl!

Dem. Ay, and the plague go with him!

Cbre. Luckily

It happens I've some money here; the rents

Of my wife's farms at Lemnos. I'll take that; [to Demipho.

And tell my wife, that you had need of it. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Manent A N T I P H O, G E T A.

Ant. coming forward.] Geta!

Get. Ha, Antipho!

Ant. What have you done?

Geta. Trick'd the old bubbles of their money.

Ant. Well,

Is that sufficient, think ye?

Geta. I can't tell.

'Twas all my orders.

Ant. Knave, d'ye shuffle with me? [kicks him.]

Geta. Plague! what d'ye mean?

Ant. What do I mean, firrah!

You've driven me to absolute perdition.

All pow'rs of heav'n and hell confound you for't,

And make you an example to all villains!

---Here! would you have your business duly manag'd,

Commit it to this fellow! * ---What could be

More tender than to touch upon this sore,

Or even name my wife? My father's fill'd

With hopes that she may be dismiss'd.---And then,

If Phormio gets the money for the portion,

He to be sure must marry her.---And what

Becomes of Me then?

Geta. He'll not marry her.

Ant. Oh, no: but when they re-demand the money,

* Commit it to this fellow.] Huic mandes, quod quidem recte curatum velis. In some editions and manuscripts we read, instead of this verse, Huic mandes, qui te ad scopulum é tranquillo inferat.—But the most judicious Critics have rejected it as spurious.

PATRICK.

On my account he'll rather go to jail! [ironically.]

Get. Many a tale is spoilt in telling, Antipho.
 You take out all the good, and leave the bad.
 ---Now hear the other fide.---If he receives
 The money, he must wed the girl: I grant it.
 But then some little time must be allow'd
 For wedding-preparation, invitation,
 And sacrifices.—Meanwhile, Phædria's friends
 Advance the money they have promis'd him:
 Which Phormio shall make use of for repayment.

Ant. How so? what reason can he give?

Get. What reason?

A thousand.—“ Since I made this fatal bargain,
 “ Omens and prodigies have happen'd to me.
 “ There came a strange black dog into my house!
 “ A snake fell through the tiling! a hen crow'd!
 “ The Soothfayer forbid it! The Diviner
 “ Charg'd me to enter on no new affair
 “ Before the winter.”---All sufficient reasons.
 Thus it shall be.

Ant. Pray heav'n, it may!

Get. It shall.

Depend on me:—But here's your father.—Go;
 Tell Phædria that the money's safe. [Exit Antipho.]

S C E N E

S C E N E V.

Re-enter DEMIPHO and CHREMES.

Dem. Nay, peace!

I'll warrant he shall play no tricks upon us :
I'll not part rashly with it, I assure you ;
But pay it before witnesses, reciting
To whom 'tis paid, and why 'tis paid.

Get. How cautious,
Where there is no occasion! [aside.

Chre. You had need.
But haste, dispatch it while the fit's upon him :
For if the other party should be pressing,
Perhaps he'll break with us.

Get. You've hit it, Sir.

Dem. Carry me to him then.

Get. I wait your pleasure.

Chre. to Dem.] When this is done, step over to my wife,
That she may see the girl before she goes ;
And tell her, to prevent her being angry,
“ That we've agreed to marry her to Phormio,
“ Her old acquaintance, and a fitter match ;

“ That

“ That we have not been wanting in our duty,

“ But giv’n as large a portion as he ask’d.”

Dem. Pshaw! what’s all this to you?

Chre. A great deal, Brother.

Dem. Is’t not sufficient to have done your duty,
Unless the world approves it?

Chre. I would chuse

To have the whole thing done by her consent:

Left she pretend she was turn’d out o’doors.

Dem. Well, I can say all this to her myself.

Chre. A woman deals much better with a woman.

Dem. I’ll ask your wife to do it then.

[Exeunt Demipho and Geta.

Chre. I’m thinking, *

Where I shall find these women now.

S C E N E VI.

Enter SOPHRONA at a distance.

Soph. to herself.] Alas!

What shall I do, unhappy as I am?

* I’m thinking where I shall find, &c.] This is intended as a transition to the next scene; but I think it would have been better if it had followed without this kind of introduction. The scene itself is admirable, and is in many places both affecting and comick, and the discovery of the real character of Phanium is made at a very proper time.

Where find a friend? to whom disclose this story?
 Of whom beseech assistance?—For I fear
 My mistress will sustain some injury
 From following my counsel: the youth's father,
 I hear, is so offended at this marriage.

Chre. Who's this old woman, coming from my brother's,
 That seems so terrified?

Soph. to herself.] 'Twas poverty
 Compell'd me to this action: tho' I knew
 This match would hardly hold together long,
 Yet I advis'd her to it, that meanwhile
 She might not want subsistence.

Chre. Surely, surely,
 Either my mind deceives me, or eyes fail me,
 Or that's my daughter's nurse. *

Soph. Nor can we find ——

Chre. What shall I do?

Soph. ---Her father out.

Chre. Were't best

I should go up to her, or wait a little,
 To gather something more from her discourse?

* My daughter's nurse.] Among the ancients the Nurses, after having brought up children of their own sex, never quitted them; which is the reason that in their plays Nurses are most generally chosen for confidantes.

ROUSSEAU'S EMILE.

Soph. Could he be found, my fears were at an end.

Chre. 'Tis she, I'll speak with her.

Soph. overbearing.] Whose voice is that?

Chre. Sophrona!

Soph. Ha! my name too?

Chre. Look this way.

Soph. turning.] Good heav'n have mercy on us! Stilpho

Chre. No.

Soph. Deny your own name?

Chre. in a low voice.] This way, Sophrona!—

---A little further from that door!---this way!---

And never call me by that name, I charge you.

Soph. What! ar'n't you then the man you said y

Chre. Hift! hift! [was? alone

Soph. What makes you fear those doors so much?

Chre. I have a fury of a wife within:

And formerly I went by that false name,

Left ye should indiscreetly blab it out;

And so my wife might come to hear of this.

Soph. Ah! thus it was, that we, alas, poor souls,
Could never find you out here.

Chre. Well, but tell me,

What business have you with that family? [pointing.

---Where is your mistress and her daughter?

Soph. Ah!

Chre. What now? are they alive?

Soph. The daughter is:

The mother broke her heart with grief.

Chre. Alas!

Soph. And I, a poor, unknown, distress'd old woman,
Endeavouring to manage for the best,
Contriv'd to match the virgin to a youth,
Son to the master of this house.

Chre. To Antipho?

Soph. The very same.

Chre. What! has he two wives then?

Soph. No, mercy on us! he has none but her.

Chre. What is the other then, who, they pretend,
Is a relation to him?

Soph. This is she.

Chre. How say you?

Soph. It was all a mere contrivance;
That he, who was in love, might marry her
Without a portion.

Chre. O ye pow'rs of heaven,
How often fortune blindly brings about
More than we dare to hope for! Coming home,
I've found my daughter, even to my wish,

Match'd to the very person I desir'd.

What we have both been labouring to effect,
Has this poor woman all alone accomplish'd.

Soph. But now consider what is to be done!
The bridegroom's father is return'd: and He,
They say, is much offended at this marriage.

Chre. Be of good comfort: there's no danger there.
But, in the name of heav'n and earth, I charge you,
Let nobody discover she's my daughter.

Soph. None shall discover it from me.

Chre. Come then!

Follow me in, and you shall hear the rest. [Exeunt.]

A C T

A C T IV. S C E N E I.

DEMIPH O, GETA.

Dem. 'TIS our own fault, that we encourage rogues,
By over-straining the due character
Of honesty and generosity.

* "Shoot not beyond the mark," the proverb goes.
Was't not enough that he had done us wrong,
But we must also throw him money too,
To live, till he devises some new mischief?

Get. Very right!

Dem. Knavery's now its own reward.

Get. Very true!

Dem. How like fools have we behav'd!

Get. So as he keeps his word, and takes the girl,
'Tis well enough.

* Shoot not beyond the mark.] Ita fugias ne præter casam. Literally, "Fly so, as not "to pass the house." Commentators have been pleased to consider this as the most difficult passage in any part of our Author's works. But the occasion on which the proverb is here used, and the whole tenor of Demipho's speech make the import of it impossible to be mistaken: Donatus long ago properly explained it, Queritur senex se, dum avari infamiam fugeret, in stulti reprehensionem incidisse.—"The old man complains, "that while he was endeavouring to avoid "the charge of being a miser, he had laid "himself open to the imputation of being a "fool."

Dem.

Dem. Is that a doubt at present?

Get. A man, you know, may change his mind.

Dem. How! change?

Get. That I can't tell: but, if perhaps, I say.

Dem. I'll now perform my promise to my brother,
And bring his wife to talk to the young woman.
You, Geta, go before, and let her know
Naufistrata will come and speak with her.

[Exit Demipho.

S C E N E II.

G E T A alone.

The money's got for Phædria: all is hush'd:
And Phanium is not to depart as yet.
What more then? where will all this end at last?
---Alas, you're sticking in the same mire still:
You've only chang'd hands, Geta.* The disaster,
That hung but now directly over you,
Delay perhaps will bring more heavy on you.
† You're quite beset, unless you look about.

* You've only chang'd hands, Geta.] Versurâ solvere, to change one creditor for another.

DONATUS.

† You're quite beset.] Plagæ crescunt.
Plagæ is generally understood here to fignify blows: but as Geta is full of metaphors in this speech, I am apt to think the words mean "the snares increase," which agrees better with the following clause, nisi prospicis, and is a sense in which the plural of plaga is often used.

---Now then I'll home; to lesson Phanium,
That she mayn't stand in fear of Phormio,
Nor dread this conference with Naufistrata.* [Exit.

S C E N E III.

Enter DEMIPHON and NAUSISTRATA.

Dem. Come then, Naufistrata, afford us now
A little of your usual art, and try
To put this woman in good humour with us:
That what is done, she may do willingly.

Nau. I will.

Dem. ---And now assist us with your counsel,
As with your cash a little while ago. †

Nau. With all my heart: and I am only sorry
That 'tis my husband's fault I can't do more.

Dem. How so?

Nau. Because he takes such little care
Of the estate my father nurs'd so well:

* Conference with Naufistrata.] Ejus orationem. Ejus here is not to be understood of Phormio, but Naufistrata: and perhaps Terence wrote hujus. DACIER.

† As with your cash, &c.] Alluding to the money borrowed of her to pay Phormio; and, as Donatus observes in another place, it is admirably contrived, in order to bring about a humorous catastrophe, that Chremes should make use of his wife's money on this occasion.

For from these very farms he never fail'd
To draw Two Talents by the year. But ah!
What difference between man and man!

Dem. Two Talents?

Nau. Ay---in worse times than these---and yet Two Ta-

Dem. Huy! [lents,

Nau. What, are you surpriz'd?

Dem. Prodigiously.

Nau. Would I had been a man! I'd shew——

Dem. No doubt.

Nau. ---By what means——

Dem. Nay, but spare yourself a little
For the encounter with the girl: left she,
Flippant and young, may weary you too much.

Nau. ---Well, I'll obey your orders: but I see
My husband coming forth.

S C E N E IV.

Enter C H R E M E S hastily.

Chre. Ha! Demipho!
Has Phormio had the money yet?

Dem.

Dem. I paid him
Immediately.

Chre. I'm forry for't.---[seeing Naufistrata.]---My wife!
I'd almost said too much. [aside.]

Dem. Why forry, Chremes?

Chre. Nothing.---No matter.

Dem. Well, but hark ye, Chremes.
Have you been talking with the girl, and told her
Wherefore we bring your wife?

Chre. I've settled it.

Dem. Well, and what says she?

Chre. 'Tis impossible
To send her hence.

Dem. And why impossible?

Chre. Because they're both so fond of one another.

Dem. What's that to Us?

Chre. A great deal. And besides,
I have discover'd she's related to us.

Dem. Have you your wits?

Chre. 'Tis so. I'm very serious.
---Nay, recollect a little!

Dem. Are you mad?

Nau. Good now, beware of wronging a relation!

Dem. She's no relation to us.

Cbre. Don't deny it.

Her father had assum'd another name,

And that deceiv'd you.

Dem. What! not know her father?

Cbre. Perfectly.

Dem. Why did she misname him then?

Cbre. Won't you be rul'd, nor understand me then?

Dem. What can I understand from nothing?

Cbre. Still? [impatiently.

Nau. I can't imagine what this means.

Dem. Nor I.

Cbre. Wou'd you know all?---Why then, so help me
She has no nearer kindred in the world, [heaven,
Than you and I.

Dem. Oh, all ye pow'rs of heaven!

---Let us go to her then immediately:

I wou'd fain know, or not know, all at once. [going.

Cbre. Ah! [stopping him.

Dem. What's the matter?

Cbre. Can't you trust me then?

Dem. Must I believe it? take it upon trust?

---Well, be it so!---But what is to be done
With our friend's daughter?

Cbre. Nothing.

Dem.

Dem. Drop her ?

Chre. Ay.

Dem. And keep this ?

Chre. Ay.

Dem. Why then, Naufiftrata,

You may return. We need not trouble you.

Nau. Indeed, I think, 'tis better on all sides,
That you should keep her here, than send her hence.
For she appear'd to me, when first I saw her,
Much of a gentlewoman. [Exit Naufiftrata. *

S C E N E V.

Manent DEMIPHIO and CHREMES.

Dem. What means this ?

Chre. looking after Naufiftrata.] Is the door shut ?

Dem. It is.

Chre. O Jupiter !

The Gods take care of us. I've found my daughter
Married to your son.

Dem. Ha ! how could it be ?

* Exit Naufiftrata.] The perplexed situation of the characters in the above scene is truly comick.

Chre. It is not safe to tell you here.

Dem. Step in then.

Chre. But hark ye, Demipho!--I would not have Even our very sons inform'd of this. [Exeunt.

S C E N E VI.

A N T I P H O alone.

I'm glad, however my affairs proceed,
That Phædria's have succeeded to his mind.
How wise, to foster such desires alone,
As, altho' cross'd, are easily supplied !
Money, once found, sets Phædria at his ease ;
But my distress admits no remedy.
For, if the secret's kept, I live in fear ;
And if reveal'd, I am expos'd to shame.
Nor would I now return, but in the hope
Of still possessing her.--But where is Geta ?
That I may learn of him, the fittest time
To meet my father.

S C E N E

S C E N E VII.

Enter at a distance P H O R M I O.

Phor. to himself.] I've receiv'd the money ;
Paid the Procurer ; carried off the wench ;
Who's free, and now in Phædria's possession.
One thing alone remains to be dispatch'd ;
To get a respite from th' old gentlemen
To tipple some few days, which I must spend
In mirth and jollity.

Ant. But yonder's Phormio.--- [goes up.
What now ?

Phor. Of what ?

Ant. What's Phædria about ?
How does he mean to take his fill of love ?

Phor. By acting your part in his turn.

Ant. What part ?

Phor. Flying his father's presence.---And he begs
That you'd act his, and make excuses for him ;
For he intends a drinking-bout with Me.
I shall pretend to the old gentlemen
That I am going to the fair at Sunium,

To

To buy the servant-maid, that Geta mention'd :
 Left, finding I am absent, they suspect
 That I am squandering the sum they paid me.
 ---But your door opens.

Ant. Who comes here?

Phor. 'Tis Geta.

S C E N E VIII.

Enter hastily, at another part of the Stage, G E T A.

Get. O Fortune, O best Fortune, * what high blessings,
 What sudden, great, and unexpected joys
 Hast thou show'r'd down on Antipho to-day!---

Ant. What can this be, he's so rejoic'd about?

Get. ---And from what fears deliver'd Us, his friends?
 ---But wherefore do I loiter thus? and why
 Do I not throw my cloak upon my shoulder,
 And haste to find him out, that he may know
 All that has happen'd?

Ant. to Phormio.] Do you comprehend
 What he is talking of?

* O Fortune, O best Fortune, &c.] O Fortuna! O Fors Fortuna! Fortuna signified simply chance; but Fors Fortuna meant Good Fortune, and there was a Temple to this Goddess near the Tiber. DONATUS.

Phor. Do you?

Ant. Not I.

Phor. I'm just as wise as you.

Get. I'll hurry hence

To the Procurer's.---I shall find them there. [going.

Ant. Ho, Geta!

Get. Look ye there!---Is't new or strange,

To be recall'd when one's in haste? [going.

Ant. Here, Geta!

Get. Again? Bawl on! I'll ne'er stop. [going on.

Ant. Stay, I say!

Get. Go, and be drubb'd!

Ant. You shall, I promise you,

Unless you stop, you Rascal!

Get. stopping.] Hold, hold, Geta!

Some intimate acquaintance this, be sure,

Being so free with you.---But is it he,

That I am looking for, or not?---'Tis He.

Phor. Go up immediately: [they go up to Geta.

Ant. to Geta.] What means all this?

Get. O happy man! the happiest man on earth!

So very happy, that, beyond all doubt,

You are the Gods' chief fav'rite, Antipho.

Ant. Would I were! but your reason.

Get.

Get. Is't enough,
To plunge you over head and ears in joy?

Ant. You torture me.

Phor. No promises! but tell us.
What is your news?

Get. Oh, Phormio! are you here?

Phor. I am: but why d'ye trifle?

Get. Mind me then! [to Phormio.
No sooner had we paid you at the Forum,
But we return'd directly home again.
---Arriv'd, my master sends me to your wife. [to Antipho.

Ant. For what?

Get. No matter now, good Antipho.
I was just entering the women's lodging, *
When up runs little Mida; catches me
Hold by the cloak behind, and pulls me back.
I turn about, and ask why he detains me.
He told me, " Nobody must see his mistress:
" For Sophrona, says he, has just now brought
" Demipho's brother, Chremes, here; and He " Is talking with the women now within."
---When I heard this, I stole immediately

* The women's lodging.] Gynæceum; from the Greek γυναικειον, οικημα understood. The Gynæceum was an interior part of the house appropriated to the women. WESTERHOVIUS.

On tip-toe tow'rds the door; came close; stood hush;
Drew in my breath; applied my ear; and thus,
Deep in attention, catch'd their whole discourse.

Ant. Excellent, Geta!

Get. Here I overheard
The pleasantest adventure!---On my life,
I scarce refrain'd from crying out for joy.

Ant. What?

Get. What d'ye think? [laughing.]

Ant. I can't tell.

Get. Oh! it was [laughing.]
Most wonderful!---most exquisite!---your uncle
Is found to be the father of your wife.

Ant. How! what?

Get. He had a sly intrigue, it seems,
With Phanium's mother formerly at Lemnos. [laughing.]

Phor. Nonsense! as if she did not know her father!

Get. Nay, there's some reason for it, Phormio,
You may be sure.---But was it possible
For me, who stood without, to comprehend
Each minute circumstance that past within?

Ant. I have heard something of this story too.*

4 H

Get.

* Antipho. I have heard something, &c.]
In all the editions which I have seen, Bent-ley's excepted, this speech is put into Phormio's mouth: but that learned Critick tells

Get. Then, Sir, to settle your belief the more,
At last out comes your uncle; and soon after Returns again, and carries in your father.
Then they both said, they gave their full consent,
That you should keep your Phanium.---In a word,
I'm sent to find you out, and bring you to them.

Ant. Away with me then instantly! D'ye linger? *

Get. Not I. Away!

Ant. My Phormio, fare you well!

Phor. Fare you well, Antipho. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IX.

P H O R M I O alone.

Well done, 'fore heaven!

† I'm overjoy'd to see so much good fortune
Fallen thus unexpectedly upon them:

us it is attributed to Antipho in a copy at Cambridge. I am sure it is very improper for Phormio, who had just before said,

Nonsense! as if she did not know her father!

COOKE.

* Away with me then instantly! d'ye linger?]
Quin ergo rape me. Cessas? Antipho is so rejoiced at Geta's news, that he jumps upon his shoulders, and is carried off in triumph. This was a sort of stage-trick, and was extremely diverting to the audience.

DACIER.

I believe Madam Dacier has not the least foundation for this extraordinary piece of information; and I must confess that I have too high an opinion both of the Roman Audience and Actors to believe it to be true.

† I'm overjoy'd, &c.] Gaudeo, &c. Pro gaudeo Guyetus Plaudite: & scenas sequentes spurias esse pronuntiat; neminemque, siquidem sanus fuerit, a se dissensurum putat. Credasne hunc hominem sanæ tum mentis fuisse, cum hæc effutiret? certe ad Anticyras relegandus tum erat; non nunc argumentis refutandus. Nihil in toto Terentio sequentibus scenis pulchrius, venustius, urbanius, moratius: sine quibus reliqua fabula, quæ nulli cedit, ex fulgore in fumum exiret. BENTLEY.

See the last note to the fifth act.

I've

I've now an admirable opportunity
To bubble the old gentlemen, and ease
Phædria of all his cares about the money;
So that he need not be oblig'd to friends.
For this same money, tho' it will be given,
Will yet come from them much against the grain;
But I have found a way to force them to't.
---Now then I must assume a grander air,
And put another face upon this business.
---I'll hence awhile into the next bye-alley,
And pop upon them, as they're coming forth.
---As for the trip I talk'd of to the Fair,
I sha'n't pretend to take that journey now. [Exit.

A C T V. * S C E N E I.

Enter DEMIPHO and CHREMES---and soon after, on t'other side, PHORMIO.

Dem. WE L L may we thank the gracious Gods, good brother,

That all things have succeeded to our wish.

---But now let's find out Phormio with all speed,

Before he throws away our Thirty Minæ.

* Act V.] I have divided what is commonly received as the fifth act into two, nor is there any other way of removing the flagrant absurdity in the old division of this play, except doing the same thing by the first act, which is the method followed by Echard, who in his translation concludes the first act with the parting of Davus and Geta; and it must not be dissembled, that Donatus lays out the play in the same manner. But in a Comedy so full of action (tota motoria, as Donatus calls it) it is surely needless to make the first act consist entirely of narration, like the meagre Step-Mother. In the division here observed, I have endeavoured to assign a particular portion of the business of the play to each act. The first contains the previous circumstances related by Geta, and the return of Demipho. The second contains the conference of Phormio and Demipho, the consultation of the lawyers, and the altercation between Dorio and Phædria.

In the third, as it ought, the situation of affairs becomes more critical: Chremes returns; we find that the old gentlemen had particular reasons to be uneasy at the marriage of Antipho; this naturally paves the way for their being bubbled by Phormio and Geta; and the act closes with the discovery of Phanium by Chremes. The fourth act communicates that discovery, in a very pleasant manner, to Demipho, and by another way, equally entertaining, to Geta, Phormio, &c. The fifth contains the endeavour of the old men to recover their money, which effort very naturally produces the catastrophe, that betrays the whole secret to all the parties interested in the event. I hope it is needless to observe, that Phormio's retiring in order to wait for the coming forth of the old men, leaves the stage vacant, where I have ended the fourth act, and forms a proper interval between that act and the fifth.

Phor.

Phor. pretending not to see them.]

I'll go and see if Demipho's at home,

That I may ——

*Dem. meeting him.]---*We were coming to you, Phormio.

Phor. On the old score, I warrant.

Dem. Ay.

Phor. I thought so.

---Why should you go to Me?---Ridiculous!

Was you afraid I'd break my contract with you?

No, no! how great foe'er my poverty,

I've always shewn myself a man of honour.

Chre. Has not she, as I said, a liberal air? *

Dem. She has.

} apart.

Phor. —And therefore I was coming, Demipho,

To let you know, I'm ready to receive

My wife whene'er you please. For I postpon'd

All other business, as indeed I ought,

Soon as I found ye were so bent on this.

Dem. Ay, but my brother has dissuaded me
From going any further in this business.

* Has not she, as I said, a liberal air?] One cannot conceive any thing more happy or just than these words of Chremes. Demipho's thoughts are wholly taken up how to recover the money, and Phormio is equally solicitous to retain it; but Chremes, who had just left his daughter, is regardless of their discourse, and, fresh from the impressions which she had made on him, longs to know if his Brother's sentiments of her were equally favourable, and naturally puts this paternal question to him. PATRICK.

“ For how will people talk of it ? ” says he :

“ At first you might have done it handsomely ;

“ But then you’d not consent to it ; and now,

“ After co-habitation with your son,

“ To think of a divorce, is infamous.”

---In short, he urg’d almost the very things,

That you so lately charg’d me with yourself.

Phor. You trifle with me, Gentlemen.

Dem. How so ?

Phor. How so ?—Because I cannot marry t’other,
With whom I told you I was first in treaty.

For with what face can I return to Her,

Whom I have held in such contempt ?

Chre. Tell him,

Antipho does not care to part with her. [prompting Demipho.

Dem. And my son too don’t care to part with her :

---Step to the Forum then, and give an order *

For the repayment of our money, Phormio.

Phor. What ! when I’ve paid it to my creditors ?

Dem. What’s to be done then ?

* Give an order for the repayment, &c.] Argentum juberursum rescribi. Scribere, rescribere, perscribere, were technical terms in use among merchants and bankers : scribere is, to borrow money ; rescribere, to repay it ; perscribere, to employ it on your own occasions. And all those dealings were carried on then, as they are now, with us, by Draughts, Bills of Exchange, &c. DACIER.

Phor. Give me but the wife,
To whom you have betroth'd me, and I'll wed her.
But if you'd rather she shou'd stay with you,
The portion stays with Me, good Demipho.
For 'tis not just, I should be bubbled by you;
When, to retrieve your honour, I've refus'd
Another woman with an equal fortune.

Dem. A plague upon your idle vapouring,
You vagabond!---D'ye fancy we don't know you?
You, and your fine proceedings?

Phor. You provoke me.

Dem. Why, would you marry her, if proffer'd?

Phor. Try me.

Dem. What! that my son may keep her privately
At your house?---That was your intention.

Phor. Ha!

What say you, Sir?

Dem. Give me my money, firrah!

Phor. Give me my wife, I say.

Dem. To justice with him!

Phor. To justice? Now, by heaven, Gentlemen,
If you continue to be troublesome---

Dem. What will you do?

Phor. What will I do? Perhaps,

You

You think that I can only patronize
Girls without portion ; but be sure of this,
I've some with portions too. *

Chre. What's that to Us?

Phor. Nothing.—I know a lady here, whose husband.—
[carelessly.

Chre. Ha !

Dem. What's the matter ?

Phor. —Had another wife

At Lemnos.

Chre. to aside.] I'm a dead man.

Phor. ---By which other

He had a daughter ; whom he now brings up
In private.

Chre. aside.] Dead and buried !

Phor. This I'll tell her. [going towards the house.

Chre. Don't, I beseech you !

Phor. Oh ! are you the man ?

Dem. Death ! how insulting !

* I've some with portions too.] Etiam dotatis soleo. Donatus explain these words, as alluding to Naufratrata ; others suppose that Phor-mio confines his thoughts to no particular instance ; but I think it is plain from the fe-quel, as well as the general tenor of the scene, that Phormio still keeps Phanium in his eye ; and expresses himself obscurely in this place, because the old men were not yet aware of the intelligence he had received on that head, tho' every subsequent speech leads gradually to an explanation, tends to create an open rupture between him and the old gentlemen, and brings on the final discovery to Naufratrata.

Chre. to Phormio.] We discharge you.

Phor. Nonfense!

Chre. What wou'd you more? The money you have got,
We will forgive you.

Phor. Well; I hear you now.

---But what a plague d'ye mean by fooling thus,
Acting and talking like mere children with me?

---I won't; I will:---I will; I won't again:—
Give, take; say, unsay; do, and then undo.

Chre. to Demipho.] Which way cou'd he have learnt this?

Dem. I don't know:

But I am sure I never mention'd it.

Chre. Good now! amazing!

Phor. I have ruffled them. [aside.

Dem. What! shall he carry off so large a sum,*
And laugh at us so openly?—By heaven,
I'd rather die.—Be of good courage, brother!
Pluck up the spirit of a man! You see
This slip of your's is got abroad; nor can you
Keep it a secret from your wife. Now therefore

* What! shall he carry off, &c.] The different characters of the two brothers are admirably preserved throughout this scene. Chremes stands greatly in awe of his wife, and will submit to any thing, rather than the story should come to her ears: But Demipho cannot brook the thoughts of losing so much money, and encourages his brother to behave with spirit and resolution, promising to make up matters between him and his wife. PATRICK.

'Tis more conducive to your peace, good Chremes,
That we should fairly tell it her ourselves,
Than she should hear the story from another.
And then we shall be quite at liberty
To take our own revenge upon this rascal.

Phor. Ha!—If I don't take care, I'm ruin'd still.
They're growing desperate, and *making tow'ards me,
With a determin'd gladiatorial air.

Chre. to Demipho.] I fear, she'll ne'er forgive me.

Dem. Courage, Chremes!
I'll reconcile her to't; especially
The mother being dead and gone.

Phor. Is this
Your dealing, Gentlemen? You come upon me
Extremely cunningly.—But, Demipho,
You have but ill consulted for your brother,
To urge me to extremities.—And you, Sir, [to Chremes.
When you have play'd the whore-master abroad;
Having no reverence for your lady here,
A woman of condition; wronging her
After the grossest manner; come you now
To wash away your crimes with mean submission?

* They're growing desperate, &c.] Hi gladiatoris animo ad me affectant viam. Alluding to the Gladiators.

No.---I will kindle such a flame in her,
As, tho' you melt to tears, you sha'n't extinguish.

Dem. A plague upon him! was there ever man
So very impudent?---A knave! he ought
To be transported at the publick charge
Into some desert.

Chre. I am so confounded,
I know not what to do with him.

Dem. I know.

Bring him before a judge!

Phor. Before a judge?

A Lady-judge; in here, Sirs, if you please.

Dem. * Run you, and hold him, while I call the servants.

Chre. I cannot by myself: come up, and help me.

Phor. I have an action of assault against you. [to Demipho.

Chre. Bring it!

Phor. Another against you too, Chremes!

Dem. Drag him away! [both lay hold of him.

Phor. struggling.] Is that your way with me!

* Run you, and hold him, while I call the servants.] In consequence of this line, most of the translations introduce the servants here; but I think the scuffle between Phormio and the old men would be much more comick in the representation without the intervention of servants: And it is remarkable that Phormio addresses himself solely to De-mipho and Chremes, and that the imperatives used by themselves also are all in the singular number, and may therefore most naturally be supposed to be addressed to each other, while in conflict with Phormio, without the aid of servants—Rape hunc—Os opprime—Pugnos in ventremingere—&c.

Then I must raise my voice.—Nausistrata!
Come hither.

Chre. Stop his mouth!

Dem. struggling.] A sturdy rogue!
How strong he is!

Phor. struggling.] Nausistrata, I say.
Nausistrata!

Chre. struggling.] Peace, firrah!

Phor. Peace, indeed!

Dem. Unless he follows, strike him in the stomach!

Phor. Ay, or put out an eye!—But here comes one
Will give me full revenge upon you both.

S C E N E II.

To them NAUSISTRATA.

Nau. Who calls for me?

Chre. Confusion!

Nau. to Chremes.] Pray, my dear,
What's this disturbance?

Phor. Dumb, old Truepenny!

Nau. Who is this man?—Why don't you answer me?

[to Chremes.

Phor.

Phor. He answer you! He's hardly in his senses.

Chre. Never believe him!

Phor. Do but go, and touch him;
He's in a shivering fit, I'll lay my life.

Chre. Nay---

Nau. But what means he then?

Phor. I'll tell you, Madam;
Do but attend!

Chre. Will you believe him then?

Nau. What is there to believe, when he says nothing?

Phor. Poor man! his fear deprives him of his wits.

Nau. to Chremes.] I'm sure, you're not so much afraid for nothing.

Chre. What! I afraid? [endeavouring to take heart.]

Phor. Oh, not at all!—And since
You're in no fright, and what I say means nothing,
Tell it yourself.

Dem. At your desire, you rascal?

Phor. Oh, you've done rarely for your brother, Sir!*

Nau. What! won't you tell me, husband?

* Oh, you've done rarely for your brother, &c.] This is commonly translated, "that it is no wonder, that you defend your brother:" but it is a more insulting speech of Phormio, alluding to the miserable condition, to which Chremes was reduced by De-mipho's advice. Thus, in the foregoing scene, Phormio says, much in the same spirit,

—————But, Demipho,
You have but ill consulted for your brother,
To urge me to extremities.——

Chre. But---

Nau. But what?

Chre. There's no occasion for it.

Phor. Not for You:

But for the Lady there is much occasion.

In Lemnos ——

Chre. Ha! what say you?

Dem. to Phor.] Hold your peace!

Phor. Without your knowledge ——

Chre. Oh dear!

Phor. He has had

Another wife.

Nau. My husband? Heaven forbid!

Phor. 'Tis even so.

Nau. Ah me! I am undone.

Phor. ---And had a daughter by her there; while You
Was left to sleep in ignorance alone.

Nau. Oh heavens! ---Baseness! ---Treachery!

Phor. 'Tis fact.

Nau. Was ever any thing more infamous?
When they're with Us, their wives forsooth, they're old.
—Demipho, I appeal to You: for Him
I cannot bear to speak to, ---And were these
His frequent journies, and long stay at Lemnos?

Was this the cheapness that reduc'd our rents?

Dem. That he has been to blame, Naufistrata,
I don't deny; but not beyond all pardon.

Phor. You're talking to the dead.

Dem. It was not done
Out of aversion, or contempt to You.
In liquor, almost fifteen years ago,
He met this woman, whence he had this daughter;
Nor e'er had commerce with her from that hour.
She's dead: your only grievance is remov'd.
Wherefore I beg you'd shew your wonted goodness,
And bear it patiently.

Nau. How! bear it patiently?

Alas, I wish his vices might end here.
But have I the least hope? Can I suppose
That years will cure these rank offences in him?
Ev'n at that time he was already old,
If age could make him modest.---Are my years,
And beauty, think ye, like to please him more
At present, Demipho, than formerly?
---In short, what ground, what reason to expect
That he should not commit the same hereafter?

Phor. loud.] Whoever would attend the funeral *

Of

* Whoever wou'd attend, &c.] Exsequias Chremeti, &c. What creates the drollery of this speech is, that Phormio here makes use of the same terms, which it was customary

Of Chremes, now's the time!---See! That's my way.
Come on then! Provoke Phormio now, who dares!
Like Chremes, he shall fall a victim to me. *

---Let him get into favour, when he will!
I've had revenge sufficient. She has something
To ring into his ears his whole life long.

Nau. Have I deserv'd this?---Need I, Demipho,
Number up each particular; and say
How good a wife I've been?

Dem. I know it all.

Nau. Am I then justly treated?

Dem. Not at all.

But since reproaches can't undo what's done,
Forgive him! He begs pardon; owns his fault;
And promises to mend.---What wou'd you more?

Phor. But hold; before she ratifies his pardon,
I must secure myself and Phædria. [aside.

---Naufistrata, a word!---Before you give
Your answer rashly, hear me!

Nau. What's your pleasure?

Phor. I trick'd your husband there of Thirty Minæ, to use at the proclamation of Funerals—

L. Titio exsequias ire cui commodum est, jam tempus est, illus defertur.

* Fall a victim.] Maclatum infortunio.
There is an elegant humour in the combination of these words; maclatum being a term used at sacrifices.

Which I have giv'n your son; and he has paid them
To a procurer for a mistress.

Chre. How!

What say you?

Nau. Is it such a heinous crime,
For your young son, d'ye think, to have one mistress,
While you have two wives?---Are you not ashamed?
Have you the face to chide him? Answer me!

Dem. He shall do ev'ry thing you please.

Nau. Nay, nay,
To tell you plainly my whole mind at once,
I'll not forgive, nor promise any thing,
Nor give an answer, till I see my son.

Phor. Wisely resolv'd, Naufistrata.

Nau. Is That
Sufficient satisfaction for you?

Phor. Quite.

I rest contented, well-pleas'd, past my hopes.

Nau. What is your name, pray?

Phor. My name? Phormio:
A faithful friend to all your family,
Especially to Phædria.

Nau. Trust me, Phormio,
I'll do you all the service in my power.

Phor. I'm much oblig'd to you.

Nau. You're worthy on't.

Phor. Will you then even now, Naufistrata,
Grant me one favour, that will pleasure me,
And grieve your husband's fight?

Nau. With all my soul.

Phor. Ask me to supper!

Nau. I invite you.

Dem. In then?

Nau. We will. But where is Phædria, our judge?

Phor. He shall be with you.---[To the audience,

* Farewell; Clap your hands!

* Farewell, clap your hands!] These three last scenes [the same that compose the fifth act in this translation] are perhaps the most beautiful of any in the Phormio; yet Guyetus has declared such a cruel war against them, that he cuts them off at one stroke, without giving quarter to so much as a single verse: but it is impossible not to say, that this is rather the disgust of a sick man, than the wholesome delicacy of a judicious critic.

DACIER.

This remark of Madam Dacier is as just as it is elegant, and the false delicacy of Guyetus is as inconsistent as it is ill founded. For if he considered these scenes as superfluous, those, which here compose the fourth act, are superfluous also; and the play should end with the interview between Chremes and Sophrona; for when Phanium is discovered to be his daughter, nobody can doubt of her being permitted to remain the wife of Antipho, since it is the very thing which the two old gentlemen were labouring to bring about. But the truth is, that Terence in this play has displayed an address something similar to that observed by Mons. Diderot in the Self-Tormentor; for though Chremes has discovered his daughter himself, yet he is particularly anxious to conceal that incident from every personage in the Comedy, except Demipho; and the gradual unfolding that circumstance to all the other characters of the play gives the poet an opportunity of continuing his piece with all that humour and pleasantry, with which we see he has accomplished it: and his uncommon art in thus adding to the interest of his Comedy, instead of suffering it to languish, after so important a discovery, is worthy our particular observation. These scenes have indeed generally procured our poet the approbation of the severest critics. Bentley, in the last note to the fourth act, speaks of them in the handsomest terms, and is so far from endeavouring to bring them within "the proscribing hook," that he declares

Guyetus

Guyetus to be an absolute madman for his unmerciful sentence of amputation.

But though there are few readers, who would not on this occasion concur in the opinion of Bentley and Dacier, yet I do not think that this Comedy has in general received the encomiums it deserves. The plot indeed, being double, is so far faulty; and the story of Phanium and Antiphø would certainly of itself afford sufficient materials for a Comedy, without the episode of Phædria and the Musick-Girl. It must however be acknowledged that, allowing that episode, the construction of the fable is extremely artful, and contains a vivacity of intrigue perhaps even superior to that of the Eunuch, particularly in the Catastrophe. The diction is pure and elegant, and the first act as chastly written as that of the Self-Tormentor itself. The character of Phormio is, as Donatus has observed, finely separated from that of Gnatho, and is, I think, better drawn than that of any Parasite in Plautus. Naufistrata is a lively sketch of a shrewish wife; as well as Chremes an excellent draught of an hen-pecked husband, and more in the stile of the modern drama than perhaps any character in antient comedy, except the Miser of Plautus. On the whole, if Terence copied as closely from his original in this play, as he is supposed to have done in the four which he drew from Menander, it must give us no mean opinion of the dramatick merits of Apollodorus.

Moliere has given us a contemptible travestie of this excellent comedy in his miserable farce of Les Fourberies de Scapin, "The Cheats of Scapin." It would be too injurious to the memories both of Terence and Moliere to enter into any particular comparison between the two pieces. I shall therefore conclude these notes with the well-known lines of Boileau.

Etudiez la cour, et connoissez la ville :
L'une & l'autre est toujours en modeles fertile.
C'est par là que Moliere illustrant ses ecrits,
Peut-être de son Art eut remporté le prix ;
Si moins ami du peuple, en ses doctes peintures,
Il n'eut point fait souvent grimacer ses figures ;
Quitté pour le bouffon, l'agreable & le fin,
Et sans honte a Terence allié Tabarin.
Dans ce sac ridicule, ou Scapin s'enveloppe,
Je ne reconnois plus l'Auteur du Misanthrope.

ART POETIQUE, Chant troisieme.

T H E E N D.

